is in my part as wel as to do
it. And therefore my Noble Lord, why I undertooke to write this Historie of England, I alleage, that hauing spent much time of my best understanding, in this part of humane Learning, Historie, both in forraine countries where especially I took those notions, as made most for the conduct of businesse in this kinde, and also at home, where it hath beene in my fortune (besides conference with men of good experience) to haue seene
many of the best discourses, negotiations, instructions and relations of the generall affaires of the
A 2 World:

The Epistle Dedicatory.

World: I resolved to make tryall of my forces in the contexture of our owne History, which for that it lay dispersed in confused peeces, hath beene much desired of many; and held to be some blemish to the honor of our Country, to come behinde other Nations in this kinde, when neyther in magnificence of State, glory of action, or abilities of nature, we are any way inferior to them. Nor is there any Natiõ, whose Ancestors haue done more worthy things, hath at home and abroad; especially for matter of war. For since the Romans, no one people hath fought so many battailes prosperously. And therefore out of the tender remorse, to see these men much defrauded of their glory so dearly bought, and their affaires confusedly deliuered, I was drawne (though the least able for such a worke) to make this aduenture: which howsoeuer it proue, will yet shew the willingnesse I haue to doe my Countrey the best seruice I could; and perhaps, by my example induce others of better abilities, to undergoe the same. In the meane time, to draw out a small substance of so huge a masse, as might haue something of the vertue of the whole, could not be, but an extraction worthy the paines, seeing it concerns them most to know the generall affaires of England, who haue least leasure to read them.

And the better to fit their vse, I haue made choyce to deliuer only those affaires of action, that most concern the gouernment: diuiding my worke

Whereof the first, briefly relates the various mutations of State, plantation and supplantation of the inhabitants in the chiefest part of this Isle, before the comming of the Norman. The second booke contains the life and Raigne of William the first. The third, the succession of William the second, Henry the first, and Stephan. And this part I haue here done.*

The second Section begins with Henry the second, the first of the royall family of Plantagenet, contains the liues of foureteene Princes of that Line, and takes up 339. yeares. A space of time that yeelds vs a view of a wider extent of Dominion, by the accession of a third part of France to the Crowne of England: more matter of action, with a greater magnificence, and glory of State then euer: intermixt with strange varieties and turnes of Fortune: the inflammation of three civil warres, besides popular insurrections: the deposing of foure Kings, and five usurpations: which, in the end, so rent the State, as all the glory of foraine greatnesse, which that line brought, expired with it selfe.

The third Section contains the succession of five Soueraigne Princes of the Line of Tewdor, and the space of 129. yeares. A time not of that virilitie as the former, but more subtile, and let out into wider notions, and bolder discoveries of what lay hidden before. A time wherein began a greater improvement of the Soueraignty, and more came to be effected by wit then the sword: Equall and iust encounters, of State, and State in forces, and of Prince, and Prince in sufficiency. The opening of a new world, which strangely altered the manner of this, inhancing both the rate of all things, by the induction of infinite Treasure, & opened a wider way to corruptiō, wherby Princes got much without their swords: Protections, & Confederations to counterpoise, and prevent ouer-growing powers, came to bee maintained with larger pensions. Leidge Ambassadors first inployed abroad for intelligences. Common Banks erected to returne and furnish moneys for these busineses. Besides strange alterations in the State Ecclesiasticall: Religion brought forth to bee an Actor in the greatest Designs of Ambition and Faction. To conclude, a time stored with all varietie of accidents fit for example, and instruction. This is the scope of my designe.

And this I addresse to you, my Noble Lord, not onely as a testimony of my gratitude for the honorable regard you haue taken of mee: but also in respect you being now a publike person, and thereby ingaged in the State of England, as well as incorporated into the Body thereof, may here learne by the obseruance of affaires past (for that, Reason is strengthened by the successe of example (to iudge the righter of things present: And withall, that heerein, you, seeing many precedents of such as haue runne euē and direct courses, like your owne (howsoeuer the successe was) neuer wanted glory, may thereby be comforted to continue this way of integrity, and of being a iust seruant both to the King and the Kingdome: nor can there bee a better testimonie to the world of your owne worth, then that you loue and cherish the same, (wheresoever you finde it) in others.

And if by your hand it may come to the sight of his Royall Maiestie, whose abilities of nature are such, as whatsoeuer comes within his knowledge is presently under the dominion of his iudgement, I shall thinke it happy: and though in it selfe, it shall not be worthy his leasure, yet will it bee much to the glorie of his Reigne, that in his daies there was a true History written: a liberty properly to Common-wealths, and neuer permitted to Kingdomes, but under good Princes. Vpon which libertie notwithstanding I will not vsurpe, but tread as tenderlie on the graues of his magnificent Progenitors, as possibly I can: Knowing there may (in a kind) be Læsa Maiestas, euē against dead Princes. And as in reuerence to them, I will deliuer nothing but what is fit for the world to know, so through the whole work, I will make conscience that it shall know nothing but (as faithfully as I can gather it) Truth: protesting herein

History of ENGLAND.

CONTAYNING
A BRIEF RELATION OF THE State of this Land, from the first knowledge we haue thereof, to the comming of WILLIAM the Norman.

Intend by the helpe of God, and your furtherance my Noble Lord, Viscount Rochester, to write a brieft History of the principall affaires tempo-rall of England, especially from the comming of the Norman, to the end of the line of Tewdor. A worke I know great, and difficult, being to be raised of many scattered peeces, variable and vncertaine relations of times, diuersly affected: wherein, notwithstanding,

ding, I vow to bee of no other side, then of Truth, or as neere truth-likelnesse as I possibly can get. Nor will produce any thing, but out of the best approued Monuments domesticall and forraine. Holding it an impietie to misfashion the memorie of times past, and sute them to our present liking, and discourse: or to misleade the credulitie of men, by making vp the opinion of Antiquitie, with improbabilities, considering we are not so tyed to stand to the same of things, as to suffer our vnderstanding to bee abused: nor yet so freed, to traffique, all vpon our owne coniectures, without custome of tradition: or so to vnderualew the discretion of former times, as if ours were of a greater dimension: and peremptorily to censure those actions, whose causes, and counsels we know not, hauing nothing but the euents, as dead carcasses, to shew vs what their lining motions were.

And though I had a desire to haue deduced this Breviarye, from the beginning of the first British Kings, as they are registred in their Catalogue, yet finding no authentick warrant how they came there, I did put off that desire with these considerations: That a lesser part of time, and better knowne, was more then ynough for my abilitie: and it was but our curiositie to search further backe into times past, then wee might well discerne, and whereof wee could neyther haue prooffe nor profit: how the beginnings of all people, and states were as vncertaine as the heads of great Riuers: and could not adde to our vertue, and peraduenture little to our reputation to know them. Considering how commonly they rise from the springs of pouertie, pyracie, robbery, and violence, how soeuer fabulous Writers, to glorifie their Nations, strue to abuse the credulitie of after ages with heroycall or miraculous beginnings: Seeing States, as men, are euer best scene, when they are vp, and as they are, not as they were. Besides, it seemes, God in his prouidence, to checke our presumption, wraps vp all things in vncertaintie, barres vs out from long antiquitie, and boundes our searches within the compasse of a few ages, as if the same were sufficient, both for example, and instruction, to the gouernment of men. For had we the particular occurrents of all ages, and all Nations, it might more stufte, but not better our vnderstanding. Wee shall find still the same correspondencies to hold in the actions of men: Virtues and Vices the same, though rising and falling, according to the worth, or weakenesse of Gouvernors: the causes of the ruines, and mutations of States to be alike: and the trayne of affaires, carried by precedent, in a course of Succession vnder like coulors.

But

But yet for that the chaine of this businesse hath a linke of dependancie with those former times, wee shall shew the passage of things the better, if we take but a superficiall view, of that wide, and vncertainly related State of this Land, since the candle of letters gaue vs some little light thereof. Which was, since the Romans made it a tributary Prouince to their Empire. For before, as it lay fecluded out of the way, so it seemed out of the knowledge of the world. For Julius Caesar, being but on the other side, in Gaul, could not attaine to any particular information of the State of Britayne, by any meanes he could vse, but by certaine Merchants (of whom hee got together as many as he could) who tolde him something of the coast-townes; but of the state and condition of the in-dwellers, they could say nothing, eyther so incurious were they of further knowledge then what concern'd their trade, or the people heere so wary, to keepe their state reserved, and vnkown to strangers. And yet Caesar gaue out, that they sub-ayded the Gauls against him, and made it the occasion of his quarrell, and inuasion of the Land, whereof he onely subdued the South parts, and rather shewed it, then won it, to the Roman Empire.

But now what was the State and forme of Government among the Britaines before this subiection? The first certaine notice wee haue is also by the same Caesar, who tels vs how they were devided into many seuerall States: nominates foure Princes of Kent by the title of Kings: how Casseuillaunus, by the common counsell was elected, in this their publicque daunger, to haue the principall administration of the State, with the businesse of warre: and afterward how the Cities sent their hostages vnto him. Vwhereby we perceiue it was no Monarchie, as it is reported to haue beene, but like to the Gauls, with whom it was then, one in Religion, and much alike in fashion and language, devided into a multitude of pettie regiments, without any intire rule, or combination. As now, we see all the West world (lately discovered) to bee, and generally all other countries are, in their first and naturall freedomnes; before they come to be taken in, either by some predominant power from abroad, or grow to a head, within themselves, of strength and understanding, to ouermaister, and dispose of all about them; introducing such formes of rule, as ambition, or their other necessities shal beget. And such was then the State of Britayne, Gaul, Spain, Germanie, and all the West partes of Eurape, before the Romans (ouergrowing first the people of Italy, in like manner devided) did by strength, and cunning vnlocke those liberties of theirs. And such as were then termed Kings, were but as their Generals in warre, without any other great iurisdiction, within those small limits they held. So that to tell vs of the state of a Monarchie in this Land, (before that time,) as if alone vnlke, or more in State then all other nations, is to giue entertainment to those narrow conceits as apprehend not the progresses in the affaires of mankind, and onely the inuention of such as take all their reason from the example and Idea of the present Customs they see in vse. For had there beene an absolute Monarch in these parts, which might haue affronted the Romans, with the power of a well-vnited State, it had beene impossible for them (hauing oftentimes much to do euen with some poore Prince of a small territory) to haue circumvented or confounded, with all their stratagems, and iniustice, the peace and libertie of the world, in such sort as they did. And though the Britaynes were then simple and had not that fire-brand of letters, yet seemed they more iust and honest, and brought forth on the Stage of action, men as magnanimous, and toucht with as true a sence of honour and worthinesse, as themselves. But hauing no firme combinements to chayne them together in their publique dangers, they lay loose to the aduantage of the common enemy, working vpon the factions, and emulations, vsuall to such diuisions, and were made the

the instruments of their owne subiection: for whilst euery one defended them apart, the whole was ouercome.

So that with what credit, the account of about a thousand yeares from Brute to Cassellannus, in a line of absolute Kings, can bee cleared, I doe not see, and therefore will leaue it on the booke to such as will bee creditors, according to the substance of their vnderstanding. And yet, let me craue pardon, least being but to report, I might seeme to contend, if I make this inquiry: how the memorie of those former times, came to be preserved and deliuered to posterity, if they had not the vse of letters in this Land (as it seemes by all probabilities they had not) before they were introduced by the Romans, who sure would haue giuen vs notice thereof, had they found them heere at their comming, and especially of Schooles and the Greeke tongue, reported to haue beene planted heere for many ages before: but they tell vs of no such thing: they informe vs how the Druides, who were the ministers of Religion and Iustice, the especiall men of knowledge, committed not their mysteries to writing, but deliuered them by tradition, whereby the memory of them after their suppression (first by Augustus, and after by Claudius) came wholly to perish with them. Which had they had letters and bookes, could neuer the information of things euen present) let it be iudged.

And now for the time since (which seemes to be all that amounts to our knowledge of the State of Britaine) we find it, during the domination of the Romans, gouerned by their Prefects: and if they had Kings of the British nation, they were tributarie, and had their whole authoritie depending on that Empire; which as the same Tacitus, (that free-tongued Roman) saith; made it now their custome to haue Kings the instruments of seruitude: speaking of Cogedunus, to whom Claudius gaue certaine Cities in Britaine, with title of King. For now after Cæsar had opened the passage, & made tributarie so much, as he subdued, the rest could not long hold out, against that all-incompassing State of Rome: although during the time of their ciuill warres, and change of government, from a Republique to a Monarchie, this Country lay neglected the space of 20. yeares: yet after Augustus had setled the soueraigntie, and possesst all the wide obedience of that Empire, the Princes and Cities of Britaine, fearing to be inforced, came in of their owne accord, with their gifts and tributes, and the rather, for that as yet, they had found no other weight of subiection, then a tollerable tribute, which, it seemed, they were content to indure with the rest of their neighbours. gustus time, when the corruptions of that State, had bred miserable inflammations in all parts of the world, the Britaines, what with their owne factions, and those of their Roman commanders, remayned in an vncertayne obedience till the time of Claudius the Emperor; who hauing much of the fume of glorie, and little fire to raise it otherwhere: casts an especiall eye on this Prouince, to make it the pompous matter of his triumph, and to prepare the way, without aduenture of himselfe, for-sends Publius Ostorius Scapula a great warrior, Pro-prator into Britaine, where he met with many turbulencies, and a people hardly to be driuen, howsoeuer they might beledde: yet as one who well knew his mistier; and how the first euent is those which incusset a dauntingnesse, or daring, imployed all meanes to make his expeditions sodaine, and his executions cruell. Notwithstanding did Carodocus, one of the British Kings, hold these great Romans worke for 9. yeares together, and could not be surpris'd, till, betrayed by his owne nation, hee was deliuered into their hands, and brought to Rome captiue, with his wife and children, to be the subiect of their triumph: whereof notwithstanding the glorie was his.

But Claudius had the honour of taking in the whole Isle of Britaine, to the Romane Empire which though thus wonne, was not, till a long time after, overcome. For now the Britaines (vnderstanding the miserie of their dissociation: how their submission brought but the more oppression) colleague themselves, against the Romans, taking their occasion vpon the outrages, committed on the person, and State of Queene Voadicia, widdow of Prasutagus King of the Iceni, a great and rich Prince; who at his death had left Nero his heire, and two daughters, hoping thereby to free his house from iniurie: but it fell out contrarie: for no sooner was hee dead, but his Kingdome was spoyled by the Centurions, his house ransack't by slaues, his wife beaten, and his daughters rauished. Besides the chiefe men of the Iceni (as if all the region had beene giuen in prey) rest of their goods, and the Kings kinsmen esteemed as captiues, with which continually, and feare of greater mischiefe, they conspire with the Trinobantes and others not yet inured to seruitude, to resume their liberty. And first set vpon the Garrisons of the Veteran souldiers (whom they most hated) defeated the ninth legion, whereof they slew all the foote, forced Cerialis the Legat, and leader to flight, and put to the sword 70. thousand Romans & associats, inhabiting their municipall townes, London, Virolame, and Camolodunum; before Suetonius Gouvernour of the Prouince could could assemble the rest of the disperfed forces, to make head against their Armie consisting of 12000. Britaines, conducted by Voadicia, who (with her two daughters, brought into the field to moue compassion and reuenge) incites them to that noble, and manlie worke of libertie: which to recouer shee protests to hold her selfe there, but as one of the vulgar, without weighing her great honour and birth, resolved either to win or die. Many of their wiues were likewise there, to be spectators and encouragers of their husbands valour, but in the end Suetonius got the victorie with the slaughter of 80. thousand Britaines, whereupon Voadicia poysons herselfe, and the miserable country with their heauie losse, had also more weights layd vpon their seruitude. And yet after this made they many other defections, and brauely struggled with the Romans, vpon all advantages they could apprehend, but the continuall supplies, eter ready from all parts of that mightie Empire, were such, as the Britaines, hauing no meanes, but their owne swordes, in an vncomposed State layde allopen to inuasion, & spent their blood in vaine. And in the end, growing base with their fortune (as loosing their verue with their libertie) became vterly quayled, and miserably held downe to subiection, by the powrefull hand of 14. Garnisons, disposed in feuerall limits of the Land, with their companies, consisting of sundry strange nations, computed in all to be 52. thousand foote, and 300. horse, besides 37. companies containing 23. thousand foote, and 1300. horse; which continually guarded the North parts, where that, which is now Scotland, and obeyed not the Roman Empire, was excluded from the rest with a wall or trench, first raised by Agri-cola, after reedified by Adrian, Severus and others.

And in this sort continued the State of Britaine, whilst the Romans held it; induring all the calamities that a dejected nation could doe, vnder the domination of strangers, proud, greedy and cruell. Which not onelic content, by all tyrannicall meanes, to extort their substance, but also constrain their bodies to serue vnder their ensignes, when, or where-soeuer their quarrelous ambition would expose them. And besides the being at the will of their rulers, in their obedience, they were forced to follow them also in their rebellions. For after the election of the Emperours grew to be commonly made by the Armies, many possessing those mightie Roman forces here, were proclaymed Casars, & put for the whole Empire. As first Carausius, & after him Alectus, whome Constantius (the associate of Maximianus, in the Empire) at his first coming into into Britaine, by Aselepiodorus the Prætorian Præfect, vanquished, with all such as tooke part with him. After that, the Caledonians, and Picts, made eruptions into the State, and much afflicted the Britaines: whom to repress, Constantius, (then sole Emperour of the west) came the second time into this Land; and in an expedition to the north parts, died at Yorke; whither his sonne Constantine (a little before his death) repaired out of Illiria, escaping a traine, laid for him by Galerius, Emperour of the East, with whom hee was in warres against the Sarmatians, when his father came first into Britaine, against Alectus; and heere was he now first saluted Emperour, for which it seemes hee much esteemed the Countrie, as that which gaue birth to his dignitie. And re-ordering the gouernment therof, for a future security, diuides it into 5. Prouinces, to bee ruled by one vice-gerent; 5. Rectors, 2. Consulars, and 3. Presidents. After whose time, we haue no certaine nor important marke to direct vs, which way the State went, till the raigne of Valentinian the elder; who sendes Theodosius (the father of him who was after Emperour of that name) into Britaine, against the irruptions of the Picts, Attacotti, Scoti, Saxones & Franci, which of all sides inuaded and spoiled the Countrey: and after Theodosius had by the forces of the Battani, and Hernli, cleared cleered it; Civilis was sent to gouerne the Province, and Dulcitius the Army: Men of faire names for such offices.

In these warres with Theodosius, was one Maximus, a man borne in Spaine, but of Roman education, who after, in the time of the younger Valentinian, hauing the charge of the Armie, was heere proclaymed Cesar, and to subuert the present Emperour, transports the whole power of Britaine: and first in his way subdues Gaule, and there furnishes euery place of defence with British souldiers; and they saie, peopled the whole Countrey of Armorica, (now called Britaine in France) with the same nation: which yet retaines their language, in some kinde, to this day. And hauing spread one arme to Spaine, the other to Germanie, imbraced so great a part of the Empire, as hee draue Valentinian to seeke aid of Theodosius, Emperour of the East, after the vanquishment and death of his brother Gratianus at Lions. And by this immoderate vent, both of the Garrisons, and the ablest people of the Land, hee dis-furnisht and left it in that impotencie, as it neuer recovered like power againe. All those great forces hee tooke with him, either left in Gaule, or perishing with him at Aquileia, where hee was ouerthrowne by Valentinian.

And yet againe in the time of Honorius the Emperour, the Colony of the Veteran souldiers, fearing fearing the inuasion of the Vandales, made another defection, and tumultuarily proclaimed Emperour, one Marcus, whom shortly after they slue, then Gratianus, who likewise within foure moneths being murdered, they gaue the title to one Constantine, not so much for his merit, as the omission of his name. This Constantine taking the same course that Maximus did, whatsoeuer strength was left, or lately in any sort recovered, he emptied it wholly, and made himselfe of that power, as hee subdued many of the Westerne Provinces: gaue his son Constans (a Monke) the title of Augustus, and after many fortunes, and incounters with the forces of Honorius came vanquished, and executed at Arles. Where also perished, the whole power he brought out of Britayne. And so the State hauing all the best strength exhausted, and none, or small supplies from the Romans, lay open to the rapine and spoyle of their Northerne enemies: who taking the aduantage of this disfurnishment, neuer left till they had reduced them to extreme miseries: which forced them to implore the aide of Aetius, Praefect of Gaule vnder Valentinian 3. and that in so lamentable manner, their Embassadors in torne garments (with sand on their heads to stir compalsion) as Aetius was moued to send forces to succour them, and caused a wall to be raysed vpon the trench (formerly made by Adrian) from Sea to Sea of eight foote thicke, and twelue high inter-set with Bulwarks, which the Roman souldiers, and an infinit number of Britaynes (fitter for that worke then warre) with great labour effected. And so Aetius left them againe, once more freed and defended from their enemies, aduising them from thenceforth, to inure and imploy their owne forces, without any more expectation of succour from the Romans, who ouer-wrought with other businesse could not attend affaires that lay so farre off.

No sooner had the enemy intelligence of the departure of these succours, but on they came, (notwithstanding this fortification) battered downe the wall, ouerthrew the defenders, and harrowed the country worse then before. Whereupon, againe this miserable people send to Aetius, vsing these wordes: To Aetius thrice Consull, the sighes of the Britaynes, and after thus complaine: The Barbarous enemy beates vs to the Sea, the Sea beates vs backe to the enemy: between these two kind of deathes, wee are eyther murdered or drowned. But their implorations preuailed not, for Aetius at that time had enough to doe, to keepe his owne head, and Valentinian the Empire: which now indured the last convulsions of a dying State, hauing all the parts and Prouinces thereof, miserably rent and torne with with the violencies of strange nations. So that this was also in the fate of Britayne to be first made knowne; to perish by, and with the Roman State. Which neuer suffering the people of this Land, to haue any vse or knowledge of armes, within their owne country, left them (vpon their dissolution) naked and exposed to all that would assaile them.

And so ended the Roman Gouvernement in Britayne, which from their first inuasion by Julius Caesar to this Valentinianus 3. had continued the space of 500. yeares. In all which time, we find but these 7. Brittish Kings, nominated to haue reigned: Theomantius, Cunobelinus, Guiderius, Aruiragus, Marinus, Coelus, and lastly Lucius, who is crowned with immorall honor for planting Christian religion within this Land. All other from Lucius to Vortigern, (who succedes this relinquishment) were Roman gouernors.

This is briefly so much of especiall note as, I can collect out of the Roman historie, concerning the State and gouernment of Britayne: finding els-where little certaintie, and from hence forth (during their short possession of this Land) farre lesse: Whereof Gildas, the Britayne complains, laying the cause on the barbarisme of their enemies, who had destroyed all their monuments and memoriall of times past. And though himselfe wrote, about forty yeares after the inuasion of the Saxons, and was next these times we come now to remember, yet hath hee left (in his enigmaticall passions) so small light thereof as wee discern very little thereby. Nor hath the Britaynes any honour by that antiquity of his, which ouerblacks them with such vgly deformities as wee can see no part cleere: accusing them to be neyther strong in peace, nor faithfull in warre, and vniuersally casts those aspersions on their manners, as if hee laboured to inueigh, not to informe. And though, no doubt, there was, as euer is, in these periods of States, a concurrence of disorder, and a generall loosenesse of disposition, that met with the fulnesse of time; yet were there, no doubt, some mixtures of worth, and other notions of that age, where-with after-times, would haue bene much pleased to haue had acquaintance. But it seemes his zeale (in that respect) wider then his charity, took vp the whole roome of his vnderstanding, to whom the reuerence of antiquity, and his title of Sapiens doth now giue Sanctuary, and we must not presume to touch him.

Such was the State of Britayne, left without armes or order, when Vortigern, eyther by vsurpation or faction, became King, and is said to bee the author of the first calling in, or imploying, being in, the Saxons, to make good his owne extablistment, and the safety of the Kingdom, against the Picts and Scots.

The Saxons at this time, posselt the third part of Germany, holding all the countrey betweene the Riuer Rhene, and Elue, bounded on the North by the Baltique Sea, and the Ocean: on the South by Silua Hircinia, and diuided by the riuer Visurgis into Ostphalia, and Westphalia: gouerned by an Optimacie of twelue Princes, with an election of a soueraigne leader for the busines of war. This being so spacious, populous, and neere a countrey, well furnisht with shipping (which the Britaynes had not) yeelded euer plentifull meanes to supply the vndertakers of this action, which were first two brothers, Hengist and Horsa, with all necessary prouisions vpon euery fit occasion. After they had bene heere a while, as stipendaries, and finding the debility of Prince and people, their number soone encreased. And first they had the Isle of Thanet allowed them to inhabite: then the whole countrey of Kent, was made ouer to Hengist by transaction, vnder covenant, to defend the Land against the Picts, and Scots. And vpon the marriage of Vortigern, with the daughter or neece of Hengist, an exceeding beautifull Ladie, (brought ouer of purpose to worke on the dotage of a dissolute Prince) larger priuileges were graunted: so that, by this allyance, and the fertility of the Land, were drawne in, so many of this popu-

Which being graunted, hee sends for Otha, his brother, and sonne Ebusa, with great supplies out of Saxony, to furnish that desaigne. And so came the Saxons to haue first domination in Kent, and Northumberland, which conteyned all the countrey from Humber to Scotland. And now beganne of seruants, Masters; to contemne their entertainors, and commit many insolencies. Whereupon the Brittish Nobilitie combine themselues, depose Vortigern (the author of this improuident admission) and elect Vortimer his sonne, a Prince of great worth, who (whilst hee liued, which was not long) gaue them many fierce incounters: but all preuailed not, for the Saxons being possesse of the principall gate of the Land, lying open on their owne countrey, to receiue all supplies without resistance; had the aduantage to weare them out of all in the end. And beside force, they are said to haue vsed treacherie in murdering 300. of the Brittish Nobilitie at an Assembly of peace at Amesbury, where they tooke their King prisoner, and would not release him, but vpon the graunt of three Pro- uinces

Also the long life of Hengist, a politique leader (of almost forty yeares continuance) made much for the settling heere of their estate: which yet they could not effect, but with much trauaile, and effusion of bloud. For the Britaynes, now made martiall, by long practice, and often battailes, grew in the end so intraged, to see their countrey surprized from vnder their feete; as they sold the inheritance thereof at a very deere rate. Wherein we must attribute much to the worthings of their leaders (whence the spirit of a people is raised) who in these their greatest actions, were especially Ambrosius the last of the Romans; and Arthur, the noblest of Britaynes: A man in force and courage aboue man, and worthy to haue beene a subiect of truth to posteritie, and not of fiction, as legendary writers haue made him: for whilst he stood, he bare up the sinking State of his country, and is said to haue incoun-tered with the Saxons, in twelue set battailes: wheerein hee had eyther victory, or equall reuenge. In the end, himselfe ouerthrowne by treason; the best men consumed in the warres, and the rest vnable to resist, fledde into the mountaines, and remote desarts of the West parts of the Isle, and left all to the inuadors, daily growing more and more vpon them. For many principall men of Saxony, seeing the happy successe and plantation heere of Hengist,	King Arthur.

Hengist, entred likewise on diuers coastes, to get Estates for themselues, with such multitudes of people, as the Britaynes making head in one place, were assaulted in another, and euerywhere ouerwhelmed with new encreasing numbers.

The seuerall
entries made by the Saxons.

For after Hengist had obtained the dominion of Kent, (which from him became to be a Kingdome) and Otha, and Ebuse posselt of all the North countries from Humber to Scotland: Ella, and his sonnes conquered the South-Easte parts, and beganne the Kingdome of the South Saxons, contayning Sussex, and part of Surrey. Then Cerdic and his sonnes landed at Portsmouth, inuaded the South, and West parts, and beganne the Kingdome of the West Saxons, which after contayned the countries of Hampshire, Berkesbeire, Wiltshire, Dorsetshire; Somersetshire, and Deuonshire. And about the same time, Vffa, inuaded the North East parts, and beganne the Kingdome of the East Angles, conteyning Northfolke, Susfolke, Cambridgehire, and the Isle of Eley: Erkinwin, beganne the Kingdome of the East Saxons, contayning Essex, Middlesex, and a part of Hertfordshire.

Hauiing thus, in a manner, surrounded the best of the whole State of Britayne; they after inuaded the inner, and middle part. And Crida began the Kingdome of Mercna-land, or middle middle Angles, conteyning Lincolnshire, North-hamptonshire, Huntingdonshire, Rutlandshire, Bedford, Buckingham, Oxfordshire, Cheshire, Derbie, Nottingham, and Staffordshire, with part of the shires of Hereford, & Hartford: Warwicke, Shropshire, Lancaster, and Gloucestershire.

And with all these Princes, and leaders, before they could establisth their dominions, the Britaines so desperately grappled, as plant they could not, but vpon destruction, and desolation of the whole countrie, whereof in the end they extinguished, both the religion, lawes, language, and all, with the people and name of Britaine. VVhich hauiing beene so long a Prouince of great honour and benefit to the Roman Empire, could not but partake of the magnificence of their goodly structures, Thermes, Aquaductes, High wayes, and all other their ornaments of delight, ease, and greatnesse: which all came to bee so vterly razed and confounded by the Saxons, as there is not left standing so much as the ruines, to point vs where they were: for they, being a people of a rough breeding, that would not be taken with these delicacies of life, seemed to care for no other monuments but of earth, and as borne in the field, would build their fortunes onely there. Which generall subuersion of a State, is very seeldome scene : Inuasion, and deuastation of Prouinces haue often beene made, but in such sort as they continued, or recouered, with some commixtion of their owne, with the generation of the inuadors. But in this, by reason of the vicinage, and innumerable population of that nation (transporting hither both sexes) the incompatibility of Paganisme and Christianitie, with the immens blood shed on both sides, wrought such an implacable hatred, as but one must possesse all. The conquest made by the Romans, was not to extirpate the nation; but to maister it. The Danes, which afterward inuaded the Saxons, made onelie at the first depredations on the coast, and therewith for a time contented themselves. When they grew to haue further interest, they sought not the subuersion, but a community, and in the end, a soueraigntie of the State; matching with the women they heere found, bringing few of their owne with them. The Normans dealt the like with the Prouince of Nuestria in France: and after they had the dominion, and what the victorie would would yeeld them in England, were content to suffer the people heere, to haue their being, intermatched with them, and so grew in short space into their bodie. But this was an absolute subuersion, and concurred with the vniuersall mutation, which about that time happened in all these parts of the world; whereof, there was no one country, or Prouince, but chaunged boundes, inhabitants, customes, language, and in a manner all their names.

For vpon the breaking vp of the Roman Empire (first deuided into two, and then by faction disioynted in each part) imploying the forces of many strange nations to fortifie their sides; were made so wide ruptures in the North, and North East boundes of that Empire; as there burst out infinite streames of strange people, that ouer-ranne, and laide open the world againe to libertie, other formes and lymits of State: whereupon followed all these transmigrations and shiftings of people, from one country to another. The Franks and Burgognons dispossessed the Gaules, and gaue the names of France and Burgogne to their Prouince. The Gaules transplanted themselves on some coastes of Spaine, where they could finde, or make their habitation: and of them had Gallicia and Portugall their names. The Hunnes and Auari subdued Pannonia, and thereto gaue the name of Hungarie. The *Long-beard*s,

At length the Kingdomes of Mercna-land and west Sax, so farre ouergrew the others in power, as betweene them two it lay, who should haue all. For Ina, a martiall, wise, and religious Prince, gouerning the west Saxons, first aduanced that Kingdome to a preheminencie, and did much to haue subdued Mercna-land: but yet Offa, (afterwards King thereof) was in faire possibilitie to haue swallowed vp both the west Saxons, and all the rest of the Kingdomes. For whilst he liued, which was in the time of Carolus Magnus, (vvith whom hee held league and amitie) hee was esteemed as the especiall King of the Land. But the manie wrongs he did, and the murther committed in his house, vpon Æthelbert, King of the East Angles, comming to him vnder publique faith, and a suitor to his daughter, were iustlie reuenged vpon his posteritie, which after him declining, in the end lost all. For Egbert, discended from Inegild, the brother of Ina, attayning the Kingdome of the west Saxons, beganne the way to bring all the rest into subiection. And being a Prince, who from a priuate fortune, wherein hee liued below, with, and not aboue other men, had learned sufferance and moderation, and and by the Estate of an exile, experience, grew to haue great aduantages ouer the time, and others borne fortunes, and rose by these meanes.

Ina, his great vncle, renouncing the world, with his Kingdome, and dying without issue, left the succession imbroiled, and out of the direct royall lyne as hee found it. So that those foure Kings of the west Saxons, vvho seuerallie succeeded him, Ethelard, Sigibert, Kinulph and Britrie, were rather Kings by election, and their owne power, then by right of descent. And Britrie knowing the weaknesse of his title, and the much promising forwardnes of Egbert; with his propinquitie in bloud, to the former Kings, practized to haue him made away; which hee perceiuing, fled first to Offa, King of Mercna-land, where finding little securitie, in regard Britrie had (to strength himselfe) married the daughter of that King, hee escaped into France, and there remaind till the death of Britrie, and then returning, obtaines the Kingdome of the West-Saxons; subdues Cornwall; inhabited by the Britaynes; and after sets vpon Bernulph, newly inuested in the Kingdome of Mercna-land; a State by the rupture of the Royall lyne, likewise growne tottering. For Egferth, the sonne of Offa, enioyed but 4. moneths, the inheritance of his fathers immanitie: whereby that that Kingdome descended collaterally to Kenulph, who left it to Kenelme a childe after murdered by his sister Quinred. Geolulph, brother to Kenulph, succeeding, after his first yeares raigne, was expeld by Bernulph, and Bernulph by Egbert, who made that Kingdome tributarie to the west Saxons, as he did after that of the South, and East Saxons, with the Kingdome of Northumberland. And by this meanes, in a manner, attained to a souerainty of the whole. But the Danes imbroyling his peace in the end of his raigne, held him backe from enioying such a fulnesse of power, as that wee may account him the absolute Monarch of the Kingdome, nor yet any of his successors so long as the Danes continued vnsubiected. For they hauing first made irruptions into the State, in the raigne of the late King Britric (his predecessor) euer after held a part thereof, and afflicted the whole, till they had attayned the absolute soueraignty to themselves.

Egbert obtained the Kingdome, which by him was named England, Anno 802

The description of the Danes.

The Danes were a people of Germanie, next neighbours to the Saxons, and of language and manners little different, possessing besides Cimbrica Chersonesus (now called Denmarke) all the Isles adiacent in the Baltique Sea, and sometimes the Kingdome of Norway, A mightie, rough, and martiall nation; strong in shipping, through their exercise of piracie, and and numerous in people for all suppliments. Who perceiuing heere the happy successe, and plantation of the Saxons, were drawne with desire and emulation, likewise, to put in for a part, the coaste lying open to inuasion, and the many diuisions of the Land, with the discord of Princes, making them an easie way thereunto. So that in a manner, as soone as the Saxons had ended their trauailes with the Britaynes, and drew to settling of a Monarchie, the Danes, as if ordain'd to reuenge their slaughters, beganne to assault them with the like afflictions. The long, the many, and horrible encounters between these two fierce Nations, with the bloudshed, and infinit spoyles committed in euery part of the Land, are of so disordred and troublous memory, that what with their asperous names, together with the confusion of place, times, and persons, intricately deliuered, is yet a warre to the Reader to ouer-looke them. And therefore to fauour mine owne paines and his, who shall get little profit thereby, I passe them ouer.

After the death of Egbert, Aethelwolp, his sonne succeeded in the State, with the title of King of the west Saxons onely, and was a Prince more addicted to deuotion then action: as may bee seene by his donation of the tenth part of his Kingdome (with exemption of all regall seruice) for the seruice of God: F besides, besides, an annuities of 300. markes, to be bestowed in pious uses at Rome; whither hee went twice in person, with his yongest sonne Alfred, whom hee especially loved; and whom Pope Leo 4. annointed a King at eleven yeares of age, as if denining of his future fortune.

Vpon his last iourney, and whole yeares stay at Rome; Æthelbald, his eldest sonne, combin'd with the Nobility of the West Saxons, to keepe him out, and depriue him vtterly of his gouernement, and wrought so, as notwithstanding the great loue his people bare him, he was brought to yeeld vp the Kingdome of the West Saxons, to Æthelbald, and retaine onely the Kingdome of the East Angles, (a State of farre lesse dignitie) to himselfe. After which, raigning but two yeares, Æthelbald succeeded in the whole, and with great infamy, marrying his fathers widow, Iudith, daughter to Charles le Chauue, King of Fraunce, enioyed it but two years and a halfe; when Æthelred, the second sonne of Æthelulph, entred to the gouernement, which he held fve yeares in continuall conflict, with the Danes.

After whome, Alfred, the mirrour of Princes (made a King before hee had a Kingdome) at 22. yeares of his age, and in a yeare wherein eight seuerall battailes had beene giuen to the Danes, by the Saxons; began his troublous raigne, wherein hee was perpetually in in warre, either against his enemies, or else against vices.

First after a great danger to lose all, hee was forced to yeelde vp a part of the Kingdome (which was that of the East Angles and Northumberland) to Guthrun, leader of the Danes, whome vpon his baptism, he made his confederate, and owner of that by right, which before he vsurped by violence.

And notwithstanding all the continuall, and intricate toile he indured amidst the clattering and horror of armes, hee performed all noble actions of peace: collecting first the lawes of his predecessors, and other the Kings of the Saxons, (as of Offa, King of Mercna-land, and Æthelbert the first Christian English King) of which, by the graue aduise, and consent of his States assembled, he makes choice of the fittest; antiquates those of no use, and addes other according to the necessity of the time.

And for that the wildenesse of warre, by reason of these perpetuall conflicts with strangers, had so let out the people of the Land, to unlawfull riots and rapine; that no man could trauaile without conuoy: hee ordained the diuisions of Shires, Hundreds, and Tithings: that euery Englishman (now the generall name for all the Saxons) liuing legally, might be of a certaine Hundred or Tithing, out of which hee was not to remoue without securitie:

ritie: and out of which, if he were accused of any crime, hee was likewise to produce sureties for his behauiour, which if hee could not finde, hee was to indure the punishment of the law. If any malefactor, before or after hee had put in sureties escaped; all the Tithing or Hundred were fined to the King, by which meanes he secured traauilers, and the peace of his countrey.

The opinion hee had of learning made him often complaine the want thereof: imputing it amongst his greatest infortunes to haue beene bred without it, and to haue his Kingdome so vtterly destitute of learned men, as it was, through the long continuance of this barbarous warre: which made him send out for such, as were any way famous for letters, and hauing gotten them, hee both highly preferred them, and also (as they doe, who know not too much themselues) held them in great veneration: rarenes then, setting a higher price on meaner parts, then after, plenty did on more perfections. Grimbald, and Scotus, hee drew out of France: Affer (who wrote his life) out of Wales; others from other parts: he was the first lettered Prince we had in England; by whose meanes and encouragement publique schooles had here, eyther their reuiuing, or beginning.

Those wants of his owne, made him take a greater greater care for the education of his sonnes, with whome were bred, vnder most diligent Masters, almost all the children of the Nobilitie within his Kingdome.

All his owne time he could cleere from other businesse, hee bestowed in studie, and did himselve, and caused others, to translate many things in the vulgar tongue: which he laboured, it seemes, much to adorne, and especially affected the Saxon meeters: wherby to glorifie that of a King, he attained the title of Poet.

The naturall day, consisting of twentie four howers, he cast into three parts: whereof eight he spent in prayer, studie, and writing: eight in the seruice of his body, and eight in the affairs of his States. Which spaces (hauing then no other engine for it) hee measured by a great waxe light, diuided into so many parts, receauing notice by the keeper thereof, as the seuerall howers passed in the burning.

With as faire an order did he proportion his reuenues, equalling his liberalities to all his other expences: whereof to make the current runne more certaine, hee tooke a precise notice of them, and made a generall suruay of the Kingdome, and had all the particulers of his estate registred in a booke which hee kept in his treasure at Winchester. And within this circumference of order, hee held him in that irregularitie of fortune, with a weake disposition of body, and raigned seuen and twenty yeares, leauing his sonne Edward, a worthy successor, to maintaine the line of Noblenesse thus begun by him.

EEdward*, though hee were farre inferiour to him in learning, went much beyond him in power: for hee had all the Kingdome of Mercna-land, in possession: whereof Alfred had but the homage, and some write, held souerainity ouer the East Angles, and Northumbrians: though wee finde in the ioynt lawes that hee and Guthrun made together, they held the same confederation fore-concluded by Alfred. Hee also subdued the Britaynes in Wales: fortified and furnished with Garisons diuers townes in England, that lay fit to preuent the incursions of the Danes; and was all his raigne of twentie three yeares, in continuall action, and euer before hand with fortune. And surely his father, he, and many that succeeded, during this Danieque warre, though they lost their ease, wonne much glory and renowe. For this affliction held them so in, as hauing little out-lets, or leisure, for ease and luxury, they were made the more pious, iust and carefull in their gouernement: otherwise it had beene impossible to haue held out against the Danes, as they did: a people of that power and and vndauntable stomacke, as no fortune could deterre, nor make to giue ouer their holde. And the imbecillitie of some vnactive Prince at that time, had beene enough to haue let them quite into the whole: which may be the cause, that in the succession of some of these Kings, were certaine ruptures made out of course, in respect of their ablenesse. As first after the death of this renowned King Edward Senior, his sonne Athelstan of full yeares, and spirit, was (notwithstanding the bracke in his birth) preferred before his legitimate sonne Edmond, vnder age: Nor did Athelstan disappoint the Kingdome in this worke, but performed all noble partes of Religion, Iustice, and Magnanimitie, after sixteen yeares raigne, dying without issue, Edmond his brother succeeded him. A Prince likely to haue equalled the worth of his predecessors, had hee not vntimely perished by the hand of a base outlaw in his owne house, at a festiuall, amidst his people, that deerely loued and honoured him. And though he left two sonnes, yet was Edred his brother preferred to the Kingdome before them: who making no variation from the lync of virtue, continued by his aunccestors, was held perpetually in worke by the Danes, during the whole time of his raigne, which was of ten yeares.

Edmond, succeeded him, an irregular youth, who interrupting the course of goodnesse, liued dissolutely, and died wishedly. Otherwise had Edgar (the other sonne of Edmond) continued that rare succession of good Princes, without the interposition of any ill.

Edgar, though he were but sixteene yeares of age, yet capable of counsell, was by the graue aduise of his Bishops (who in that time of zeale held especially the raines on the hearts and affections of men) put and directed in the way of goodnesse, and became a most heroicall Prince.

Amongst other his excellent actions of gouernement, hee provided a mightie Nauie, to secure his coasts from inuasion; which now he found (though late) was the onely meane to keepe out these miseries from within, that thus lamentably afflicted the land, euer before negligent, or not inured to Sea-affaires. For when the Romans first subdued the same, there was no shipping, but a few small vessels made of wicker, and couered with hides: whereby they, and after the Danes, both mightie (as those times gaue) in shipping, found that easie footing they had: Yet Egbert is said to haue provided a strong Nauie, about the yeare 840. And Alfrid 30. or 40. yeares after did the like. But cyther now dis-vsed, or consumed by the enemy, Edgar re-edifies, and sets forth a Fleet consisting consisting (as some write) of 1600 saile, others a farre greater number, and those he deuises and places in foure parts of the Realme, making his progresses yearly, with part of this mightie Nauie, round about the whole Isle, whereof he assumed the title of King.

And to reduce it all to one name and Monarchie, hee was intitled, King of all Albion; as testifies his Charter granted to the Abbey of Maldesmesburie, in these words: Ego Edgarus totius Albionis Basileus nec non Maritimarum seu insularum Regum circum habitantium, &c. For hee hauing first of all other made peace with the Danes, and granted them quiet cohabitation through all his dominions; had the soueraigntie ouer them: And Kenneth, king of Scots did him homage, whether for Cumberland and Westmerland, giuen to that Crowne by King Edmond his father, or for his whole kingdom: I cannot say. And five Kings of Wales did the like for their countrey, and came all to his Court at Cardiffe.

So that he seemes the first and most absolute Monarch of this land that hitherto wee find: The generall peace that held all his time, honored his name with the title of Pacificus: and rendred his Kingdome, neuer before acquainted with the glory of quietnesse, very flourishing.

But as if the same had been giuen to shew,

Elfred his step-mother is said to haue murdered him, hunting in the Ile of Purbeck and not to vse, like a short calme betwixt stormes, it lasted but little beyond his raigne of sixteene yeares : being too short to close the disseuered ioynts of a commixed Kingdom; which was onelic to haue beene the worke of Time : and that none of these late Princes (who were best like to haue aduanced and confirm'd the State of a Monarchie,) were ordeined to haue. But all (as if things would another way) were put off from their ends, by their vntimely deaths : as was this glorious young Prince, in the 32. yeare of his age: leauing his sonne Edward, a childe, to vndergoe the miseries of nonage, to be made a sacrifice for ambition, and a Saint by persecution, through the hand of a step-mother; vwho to aduance her owne sonne Ethelred, brake in, ouer the bounds of nature and right, to make his way : and is said, her selfe to haue murdered him, comming to her house, estrayed, in hunting, and discompanied.

BUT Ethelred, as if ill-set, prospered not on this ground : the entrance to whose raigne was bloud; the middle, miserie; and the end, confusion. They write, Saint Dunstan preaching at his Coronation, propheticallie foretold him of these calamities would follow this transgression: saying: For that thou hast aspired to the Crowne, by the death of thy brother,

"ther, murdered by thy mother; thus saith the Lord: the sword shall neuer depart from thy house, raging against thee all the dayes of thy life, slaying those of thy seede, till the Kingdome be transferred to another, whose fashion and language thy people shall not knowe. Nor shall thy sinne, nor the sinne of thy ignominious mother, with her counsellors, be expiated, but by long auengement. And this (whether so vttered or not) was ratified in the euent. For either their yniust disordering the succession, or the concurrency of hidden causes meeting with it, so wrought, as this late begunne Monarchie fell quite asunder, and begat the occasion of two conquests, by forraine nations, within the space of 50. yeares.

For the Danes, hauing now beene so long inmates with the English, disspread ouer all partes by intermatching with them, and multiplying with the late peace and confederations, had their partie, (though not their rule) greater then euer : so that this opportunitie of a yong and vnsettled Prince, in a new and branded State, drew ouer such multitudes of other of the same nation : as every coast and part of the Land, were miserable made the open rodes of spoile and saccage : in such sort, as the State knew not where to make any certaine head against them : for if incountred in one place, set his marke : and neglected no occasion to make resistance and reparations against all euents, bringing often his affaires to the verie point of dispatch, and yet put by, at an instant from all, as if nothing went with him, but his will to doe woorthily : which howsoever it were (besides the miserie to loose) hee must haue (that vvhich accompanies infelicitie) Blame, and Reproch. Though the many and desperate battailes hee made ; the good constitutions for the gouernment ; the prouisions to supply all important occasions, shew, that hee was not much behind the best Princes, but only in fortune.

By the example of Edgar his father, hee procured a mightie Nauie, causing of euery 310. hide or plough-land throughout the Kingdome, a ship to be built, and of euery eighth, a Corflet to be found : Yet all this shipping stood him in little stead, but was either qualst with tempest, consumed with fire by the enemy, or otherwise made vnusefull by neglect, or ignorance : whereby the hope and infinite charge of the State were disappointed. Famine, and mortalitie, the attendants of warre, with strange inundations, wrought likewise their part, as if conspirators of destruction, and all concurr'd to make a dismall season.

Many yeares it was not, ere Swaine king of Danes returned to raise againe new summes by by new afflictions ; and tormenting heere this poore turmoyled people, more then euer ; receiues a fee for blond-shed, to the summe of 48000 pounds ; granted in the generall assembly of the States at London, and a peace, or rather paction of seruitude concluded ; with quiet cohabitation, vse of like liberties, and a perfect vnion betweene the two nations, confirmed by oaths of either part, and Hostages deliuered of ours.

But this as a breathing time, scarce held out the yeare. When the occasion of greater mischiefes was giuen by a vniuersall massacre of the Danes suddenly heere contriued : and effected by the Kings commandement, vpon the suggestion of Hune, a great Commander, and a violent warriour of that time. Vrging the insolencie of the Danes, that now growne haughtie with this peace ; Committed many outrages, violating the wiues and daughters of great men, with many other intollerable disorders.

Such, and so suddaine was the generall execution of this act, throughout all parts of the Kingdome at one instant, as shewed the concurrence of an inueterate rankor, and incomparability of these two nations, impossible to be conioyned. So that neither Temples, Altars, Supplications, nor any band of alliance, were auailable to saue them from slaughter. Wherein to incense the more their King,

Gunild, his sister, a woman of masculine courage, who had a little before received Christendom, a mediator and pledge of the peace, having first her husband and sonne slaine in her sight, rather with a threatening, then appalled countenance, met her death, making imprecation for reuenge, and foretelling her blood would, as it did, cost England deere.

Soone was the notice of this enormous act, giuen to Swaine, and as soone armed with rage and power, reëntred he the Kingdome, hauing now a fairer shew to doe sowly, then euer: wrong had made him a right, who had none before: and the people of the Land, not so forward to maintaine their act, as to commit it, rather were content to giue him the possession of their country, then that he should win it: the greatest part of the Kingdome submitting themselues vnto him; onely the citie of London, which Ethelred held fortified made noble resistance till hee left them; and, conueyed himselfe first into the Isle of Wight, and after into Normandie, whither hee had sent Emma his Queene, with their 2. sonnes, Elfrid and Edward, before, from the rage of this tempest. But within 2. moneths he was recalled home by the people of England, vpon the death of Swaine, who at the point to haue beene crowned King, and had generally taken ostages and oathes of fealty, died suddenly:

leauing his sonne Knute to succcede his fortunes, and accomplish what he intended.

Ethelred returning, was soone furnisht with an Army, sets vpon Knute in Lindsey, where he lay with his fathers shipping, and Hostages, and draue him to take the seas: wherewith enraged, making about to Sandwich, he miserably mangled, and dismembred those Hostages, and so sent them home: himselfe, with the spoiles his father. and he had gotten, returned to his countrey, to make greater preparations for the prosecution of his purpose.

Ethelred in the meane time, to increase the summe of reuengement with more wrath, at a generall Assembly at Oxford, caused many of the Danicque Nobilitie to be murdered: Among which were Sigifrith, and Morchar, Eearles of Northumberland, whom the false Edric (who had a hand on each side for mischief) inuiting them to his lodging, vnder pretence of feasting, barbarously caused to be slaine: their followers, after they had so long as they could desperately defended themselves and their maisters, fled into a Church, where they were with the same burnt. Knute armed with the greatest of his owne & neighbours powers made his confederates, landed againe, within the yeere, at Sandwich, & without resistance, had all the VVest parts rendred vnto him, with pledges for their obedience, and furnishment with horse and armor. Here the false Edric leaues his Liege-lord, and yeelds vs 40. ships, and his periur'd faith to Knute. Ethelred, languishing in minde and bodie, Edmond his sonne, surnamed Ironside (to oppose youth to youth) was imployed against this rabious inuador. A Prince worthy of a better time, and had he found faith, had made it so, and deliuered his country at that turne, from the worst of miseries, the conquest by strangers.

BVt now vpon the death of Ethelred (whose 37. yeares raigne, shewes that infelicitie shall haue time too much, and happinesse too little.) Knute was by most of the Clergie and Nobilitie chosen King: onely the City of London, with some of the Nobility thereabout, made election of Edmond, and furnished him with that power, as thereby, with the courageous ardour of his youth (which commonly is most in the first attempts) he had the better in three imminent battels, within 3. moneths, and had likewise obtained the fourth at Essendon (likely to haue been the last with the Danes) but that the disloyall Edric (late renouncing his new Lord, seeing Edmonds part in possibility to preuaile) againe betray'd his trust, & withdrew himselfe, and the charge hee had, to the enemy. This fatall battell lost England: here periperished the best flower of honour it then had: Here amongst the rest was slaine, Vikill, an Earle of Essex, of euer memorable worth, who had long stood vp for the Kingdom, and in the time of Swaine, was the first that shewed there was hope and possibilitie to quail the enemy, had there beene an vnion in loyalty.

From this bloudie worke, Edmond escapes to Glocester, to recollect new forces, nor was hee so forsaken with his fortune, but that hee soone recouered another armie, to re-assaile the enemy, that might be idle vpon this victorie. But Knute, as prouident in the prosecution of his businesse, as fortunate therein, makes after: Heere when both Armies vvere at the point to incounter, a motion of peace vvas propounded: Some say the two Kings, by single combat consented to decide their fortunes, and the ouer-commer to take all: and that in an Isle of the riuer Seuern (their Armies on either shore, spectators of the act) they tried the maistry for the prize of a Kingdom: After long and equall fight, finding each others worth, they cast away their weapons, imbraced and concluded the peace: But howsoeuer, it seemes both sides tyred with the miserie of a consuming warre, neuer like to be ended, but by the vtter extirpation of the one, and considering the danger of either, and incertaintie of the future, were easily perswaded to imbrace a present agreement: which was made by parting England betwixt them two, and confirm'd by Oath and Sacrament: putting on each others Apparell, and Armes, as a ceremonie to expresse the attone-ment of their mindes, as if they made transac-tion of their persons each to other. Knute be-came Edmond, and Edmond, Knute. A satall ex-change for so free and magnanimous a Prince as Edmond: vvhho indeede was now no more himselte; and being but halfe a King, vvas in so few dayes after, none: as makes this peace shew fouler then warre: for that armed him for life, this exposed him naked to death, which was shortly after treacherously giuen him at Oxford; some say by the sonne of Edric (as if to shew hee would be the heire of his fa-ther also in Treason) whereby both the hope, and the other halfe of England were vtterly lost, as determinable with his raigne: which (with all we haue else of his magnanimous actions) took vp scarce the circuit of one whole yeare: And yet had that been space enough for glorie (whose measure is to be taken rather by the pro-funditie, then the length, which seldome holds long and euen) could he haue had that cleere, and better for his renowne to haue died at the battaile of Essendon with England, then dis-cended to haue made it halfe Denmarke, and liue.

But

BVt by this meanes Knute attayned the ab-solute dominion of the whole kingdome, which hee gouerned with better Iustice then hee got; conforming his natieue roughnes, to a more ciuile and regular fashion of life: And to haue England see that now he was hers; hee sends away his Nauie, and stipendarie soldiers, home to their countries, and puts himselte wholly, vpon this people, taking the way of mild-nesse, a better meanes for his establishment, then force: but the Land paid for the remun-eration of his people, and this euacuation of Strangers, 83000. pounds of siluer; which it ra-ther consented to do at once, then to haue them a daily burthen, to pester the State for euer.

At his first comming to the Crowne, hee sought to ridde himselte, as well of his friends as of those might proue his enemies. Edric who came first to salute him sole King of Eng-land (as if to tell, that hee made him so) hee caused his head to bee set on the highest part of the Towre of London, therein performing his promise of aduancing him aboue any Lord of the Land, and thereby discharged himselte of such a debt, which though hee should haue paid, would neuer yet bee held fully cleered: giuing a generall satisfaction to the people, that reioyced to see Treason so iustly rewarded. Like compensation had short-ly after, the Earles Turkil, and Erick, who being banished the Land, were executed vpon their arriuell in Denmarke.

But the loue, and high opinion of Iustice hee got in these, were lost againe in those actions, wherein hee tooke counsell onelic of his feares, for the extirpation of all those of the Royall bloud of England; As of Edwin, and Edward, the sonnes of the late King Edmond (to whome appertained the moyetie of the Kingdom by contract) & of Edwin his brother; which three, he sent to be murdered abroad, to beguile the rumor at home: But, which is strange, those times, though rough, afforded not yet an instrument for the execution of his desire: and all these Princes were preserved and conueyed out of danger by those vvhho should haue made them away. The two last were bred by Salomon, King of Hungarie, where Edward (suruiuing his brother) married Agatha, sister to that Queene. (And some write, daughter to the Emperour Henry 3.) by whom hee had two sonnes, Edmond and Edgar, daughters, Margaret and Christina.

Ælfred, and Edward, sonnes of King Ethelred, by Emme, were preserved by Richard Duke of Normandie their Vnkle, and so lay out of his way.

This priuate iniustice (vvhich often may be more in compassion, then hurt to the State) hee sought to recompence vvith all publique satif-

atisfactions: repairing the naufrage of the common-wealth (made by therage of warre) both in ornament and order: erecting Churches and Monasteries, with large patents of prouisions, both for the expiation of his inmanities fore-committed, and to memorize the places of his victories with his thankfulnessse to God. The Constitutions Ecclesiasticall and Ciuile, divulged in the language of that time, testifie his tender piety, and care of Iustice: and are so full of religious admonitions, as it seemes, he held the best meanes to haue lawes obserued, was to haue them first enacted in the consciences of men. Amongst others, hee inflicted exact punishment on all intemperances of his people, and offences committed against publique manners. Seuerer he was, but not cruell: few of his lawes sanguinarie, as being not the custome of the time: which though rough, yet found meanes to maintaine publique order, without the luctuall remedie of bloud. No punishments capitall, vnless conspiracies: the rest were all pecuniarie mulcts, banishments, bondage or imprisonment.

To shew his clemency, this (amongst many) is one example: there was a law, that whosoever had committed theft, and the goods found in his house, all his familie were made bond, euen to the childe in the cradle: This he

he antiquates as most vniust, and ordaines, that onely the malefactor, and such as could aide him, should endure the punishment: and that the wife, vnlesse the thing stolne, were found vnder her lock, should not be guiltie of her husbands offence.

Thus was he to his people, with whom, hee is said to haue so well cleered himselfe (how-soeuer he did with God) that he became King of their affections, as well as of their countrie. And to maintaine this opinion, hee did manie popular acts: as first all rites of honour and reuerence to the memorie of the late King Edmond, his confederate: besides: the executing all such as could bee found to haue had anie hand in that murther. Then married he heere at home, Emme, late wife to King Ethelred (though it were more for his honour then hers, to accept his bed, that had beene the persecutor of her husband and children) whereby hee held the Duke of Normandie from attempting any thing for his nephewes, in regard his sister might haue other by him.

Hauiug thus established this mightie Kingdome, occasion prepares him another. The people of Norway, contemning the debilitie of their King, and conspiring to depose him, grew into faction: whereupon hee fastens; and with the great forces he brought out of England, the might of money, and high estimation tion of his worthinesse, so preuailed, as hee soone obteyned that kingdome; and was now the most renowned and potent Prince in all these parts of the world: intituled, King of England, Denmarke, and Norwey.

Herewithall grew his magnificence, as wide as his power, and was especially extended to the Church, which he laboured most to gratifie, eyther for the conscience of his deedes, or that his people, (generally addicted to deuotion) might be made the more his. And holding it not enough to poure out his immense bounty here within the land, seekes to make Rome also feeble the fulnesse thereof; whither he went in person, and performed many famous workes of charitie and honour; both there, and in all his voyage. He freed the Saxon schoole, his predecessors of England had founded, from all imposition: as hee did likewise all streights and passages, where trauellers were with rigor constrained to pay toll.

Of his entertainment at Rome with the Pope, Conrade the Emperour, and diuerse other Princes of the Christian world, himselfe writes to the Bishops and Nobility of England, and withall exhorts them very powerfully to haue an especiall regard to the due administration of Iustice, to all his subiects alike, without doing the least wrong for his gaine, hauing no need neede to aduance his reueneue by sinne: And also charges them to see all Chirchscot and Rome-scot fully cleered before his returne.

The actiue vertue of this Prince, being the mightiest, and most absolute Monarch that euer yet appeared in this Kingdome, the author of a cloze, and first of a new Gouvernement, is such; as shewes hee strived by all worthy wayes, to lay the ground-worke of a State: which according to his frame, was cyther to hold good to his posterity, or not. And as likely was hee, to haue bene the roote of a succession, spreading into many discentes, as was afterward the Norman; hauing as plentifull an issue masculine, as hee: besides, hee reigned neere as long; farre better beloued; of disposition more bountifull, and of power larger to doe good. But it was not in his fate; his children miscaried in the succession: and all this great worke fell in a manner with himselfe.

Harald.

Harald, the eldest sonne of Knute (some write by his fathers ordinance, others by the election of the Danicque Nobilitie, in an assembly at Oxford) was made King: whereas Godwyn Earle of Kent, and the Nobility of England, would haue chosen Hardiknute, borne of Queene Emme, or else Alfride, the sonne of Ethelred, who is said to haue come out of Normandy, vpon the death of Knute, to claime the the Crowne; But Harald being at hand, caried it; The first act of whose raigne, was the banishment, and surprizing all the Treasure of his step-mother Queene Emme: Then the putting out the eyes of Alfrid her sonne, his competitor: and committing him to a loathsome prison, where hee died. For which deed, the Earle Godwyn beares a foule marke, as betraying him. Queene Emme repaires to Baldouin Earle of Flanders, her kinsman; where shee remained during the raigne of Harald, which was but of foure yeaes, and then with her sonne Hardiknute (who came out of Denmarke, as it seemes prepared for something else, then to visit her at Bridges) returned into England.

This Hardiknute inuested in the Gouvernement, soone frustrated the hope and opinion fore-conceiued of him: and first in like sort began with that degenerous act of reuenge (wherein none are said so much to delight in, as women) causing the body of the late King to be vntomb'd, the head cut off, and thrown into Thames; Then makes inquisition for such as were guilty of the death of Alfride, his brother by the mother: whereof Earle Godwyn and the Bishop of Worcester are accused: The Bishop is dispossessed his Sea; and the Earle with a rich and rare deuised present, in forme of a ship of gold, appeased that furie;

For hauing beene so long brought vp with the Nunnes at Iumieges, in Normandie, he scarce knew to be a man when hee came into England. And to shew how little hee vnderstood himselfe; they note how in a great anger hee said to a base fellow that disturbed his game in hunting, I would punish thee were I able. And as if hee had vowed their continencie with whom hee was bred, was so farre from knowing other women (eyther thorow conscience or debility) as his owne wife, after his death, protested herselfe free from any carnall act done by him, and yet liued hee with	Edward the Confessor. 1043. I 3 her her in all formall shew of marriage.

The soft simplicity of this King, gaue way to the greatnesse of the Earle Godwyn, and his children, who, for that hee would seeme the especiall man in his preferment to the Crown, and by matching his daughter Edith to him, swayed chiefly the wheele of that time; and yet not without opposition: For Syward, Earle of Northumberland, and Leofrike, Earle of Hereford, men of as great State and spirit, seeing him most for himselfe, became more for the King, and had their turne in performing very noble actions. Nor did their emulation but much conduce to the present benefite both of the King and State; For the Earle Syward, would not bee behinde hand in effecting as braue deedes in the North, as Harald, Earle of Westsex, the sonne of the Earle Godwyn performed against the Welsh in the West: For the first depriued of life and Crowne, Macbeth, an vsurper, and inuested Malcolm, in the Kingdom of Scotland, the other defeited Ris, and Griffine, two brothers, Kings of Wales, and subdued that Prouince to this Crowne.

Besides, the Earle Godwyn had to struggle with an Arch-Bishop of Canterburie, Robert, a Norman, preferred from a Monke, first to London; and after to that Sea by the King, inwardly affecting most that Nation, as being part of their blood, and bred amongst them.

Of whom it seemed hee had many about his person, whose neerenesse, being strangers, whatsoeuer they did, could not auoyde to be thought to doe ill offices against the Earle, and the English in generall: whereby, what went not right in the lyne of menn's desires: was thought to bee their cause. And in stomachs full charged, this occasion gaue more fire. Eustace Earle of Bullogue, who had married Goda the Kings sister, hauing beene at the Court, and returning into France, his Her-benger in taking vp lodgings at Douer, vpon his peremptory behauiour, was by a Citizen slaine: the Earle arriuing with all his traine, pursues, and slew the homicide, with eightene other. The Citie seeing this, tooke armes, and in the bickering, the Earle lost two and twenty of his men; wherupon, backe he halts to the King, aggrauates the insolency of the Citizens so farre, that the Earle Godwyn is sent for, and commanded with a power of men, to make against the Citie of Douer, to chastice the people. The Earle considering it was vpon the information of one side; aduised the King rather to send for the chiefe of the Citie, to vnderstand what they could say for themselves, and accordingly to proceede; which being taken for a coldnesse in the businesse, and of fauour to his countrey-men, gaue the King and his enemies occasion to suspect his affection. Shortly after, after, the Earle is summoned to an Assembly at Gloucester, where neyther hee, nor any of his sonnes would appeare; and suspecting some practice against him by his enemies, raises forces, pretending to suppress the Welsh, who were not found to offend, whereupon the Assembly removes to London, summons him againe to make his apparance, to dismisse his forces, and to come onely attended with twelue persons. Hee sends them word, to dismisse his forces hee was content, or any thing else the King would command him, so it were with the safetie of his life and honour; but to come disaccompanied, was for neither. Then was he commanded within fixe dayes to depart the Realme, which hee did, and with Toustayne and Swayne his sonnes, gets him into Flaunders, where Toustayne married the daughter of the Earle Baldouin 5. Harald his eldest sonne, departs into Ireland: the King puts from him the Queene, to bee partaker of the disgrace, and miserie of her house. The Earle Godwyn in this desperate fortune, whilst the French and his enemies possesse the King, fell to piracy, disturbed the coasts, approached London, by the Riuer; and being so popular, as no forces would oppose against him, made at length his owne peace with power; in such sort, as the French fearing reuenge, forsook both the Court and Kingdome.

This

This (as fore-pointing to a storme that was gathering on that coast) began the first difference with the French nation: which thus acquainted with the distraction of the Kingdome, and factions of great men, wrought on those aduantages, and were instruments to draw on the fatall enterprize that followed.

The weaknesse of the King, and the disproportionate greatnesse of the Earle Godwyn, being risen vp from so great a fall (learning thereby, to looke better to his feete, and make his side strong) increased these discontentments, and partialities in the State: wherein many acts of iniustice, by the sway of power and passion, were committed, which did much blacken that time of peace, and made a good man (not by doing, but induring ill) held to be a bad King.

And it is said, that Emme the Queene mother, had her part of much affliction in his raigne, suffering both in her goods and fame: and how to purge her selfe of a scandall raised on her with Alwyn, Bishop of Winchester, shee vnder-went the triall of Fire-Ordeall (which was to passe blind-fold, with bare feete, ouer certaine Plough-shares, made redde hot, and laide an vneuen distance one before the other) which shee safely performed. And the reason why, both her sonne and the State so little respected this great Lady (whose many yeares had made her an actor in diuerſe fortunes) was, for that ſhe neuer affected king Ethelred, nor the children ſhe had by him: and for her marriage with Knut, the great enemy and ſubduer of the Kingdome, whom ſhee euer much more loued liuing, and commended dead.

It ſeemed theſe priuate grudges, with mens particular ends, held theſe times ſo buſied, that the publicke was neglected, and an iſſueleſſe King, gaue matter for ambition and power, to build hopes and practiſes vpon: though for his owne part hee ſhewed to haue had a care for the ſucceſſion, in ſending for his nephew Edward, intituled the Out-law, with his children, out of Hungary. But Edward, ſhortly after his arriual died, and Edgar his ſonne (ſurnamed Atheling; to ſay, the noble Edgar) eyther by reaſon of his youth, which yet was no barre to his right, or being borne and bred a ſtranger, little knowing, or known to the Kingdome, had his claime neglected vpon the death of this pious King.

Harald the ſecond.

AND Harald, ſonne to the Earle Godwin (the next day after) was preferred to the Crowne; whether by any title hee might pretend from the Danique Kings, as diſcended from that Nation (and, as ſome report, ſonne to Githa, ſiſter to Swayne) or by meere election of the greater part of the Nobilitie, we cannot ſay.

ſay: but it ſeemes, the preſſing neceſſitie of the time, that required a more man, to vndergoe the burthen of warre, and that trouble, the world was like to fall into, by reaſon of the claimes now made both by the Dane and Norman, caſt it ſuddenly vpon him, as the moſt eminent man of the Kingdome, both by the experience of his owne deſeruings, and the ſtrength of his alliance. Neither did he faile but in fortune, to make good this election, taking all the beſt courſes both for the well-ordering of the State, and all prouiſions for defence, that a politicke and actiue Prince could do. But being to deale in a broken world, where the affections of men were all diſioyned, or daſht with the terror of an approaching miſchiefe, failing (as vſually is ſcene) in theſe publicke feares, both in their diligence and courage to withſtand it, ſoone found more then enough to do.

And the firſt man, which began to diſturbe his new government, was his owne yonger brother Tonſlayne, who in the time of the late king Edward, hauing the government of Northumberland, was for his pride and inhumanities ſhewed in thoſe parts, baniſhed the Kingdome, and now by reaſon of his former conceiued hatred againſt his brother, eaſily ſet on, by the Duke of Normandie, and Baldouin, Earle of Flanders ( whole two daughters the Duke and hee had married) assailed first the Isle of Wight, and after sets vpon the coast of Kent, whence hee was chased by the power of Harald, and forced to withdraw into the North parts, and there seeking to land, was likewise repulled, by the Earles Morchar and Edwyn (whose sister Harald had married.) Then craues he ayde of the Scots, and after of Harald surnamed Harfager, King of Norwey, being then taking in the Orchades, and exercising piracie in those parts, whom he induced with all his forces to inuade England. And landing at Tinmouth (discomfeiting their first encounters) they marched into the heart of the Kingdome without resistance. Neere Stamford, King Harald of England met them with a puissant armie; and after long and eager fight, ended the day with victory, and the death of his brother Toussaine, and the King of Norwey.

Duke

But from hence was he called with his wearied and broken forces, to a more fatall businesse in the South. For now William Duke of Normandy, pretending a right to the Crowne of England, by the testament of the late King Edward his kinsman, vpon the advantage of a busie time, and the disfurnishment of those parts, landed at Pemsey, nor farre from Hastings in Sussex: neere to which place, was tried by the great Alsiz of Gods iudgement in battell, the right of power, betweene the

the English and Norman Nation. A battaile the most memorable of all other: and howsoever miserably lost, yet most nobly fought, on the part of England; and the many wounds of Harald there slaine, with the heapes of thousands of the English, shew, how much was wrought to haue sau'd their countrey, from the calamity of forraine seruitude.

And yet, how so great a kingdome as England then was, could with one blow be subdued by so small a prouince as Normandy; in such sort, as it could neuer after come to make any generall head against the Conquerour, might seeme strange, did not the circumstances fore-noted, and other concurrent causes, in the next booke to be declared, giue vs faire and probable reason thereof: Besides, the indisposition of a diseased time (as it is described by such as liued neere it) may giue vs great euidence in this examination. For they say, the people of this kingdome, were, by their being secure from their former enemy the Dane, and their long peace (which had held in a manner from the death of king Edmond Ironside, almost 50. yeares) growne neglectiue of armes, and generally debauched with luxurie, and idlenesse: the Cleargie licentious, and onely content with a tumultuary learning: The Nobilitie giuen to gluttony, venery and oppression: the common sort to drunkennesse, and all disorder: And they say, that in the last action of Harald at Stamford, the brauest men perished, and himselfe growing insolent vpon the victorie, retayning the spoyle, without distribution to his souldiers, not inured to be commanded by martiall discipline, made them discontent and vnruely: and comming to this battell with many mercenary men, and a discontented Armie, gaue great occasion to the lamentable losse thereof.

Besides, the Normans had a peculiar fight with long bowes, wherewith the English (then altogether vnacquainted) were especially overthrowne. And yet their owne Writers report, how the maine battallion of the English, consisting of Billes (their chiefe and ancient weapon) held in a body so close lockt together, as no force could dissolue them; till the Normans, fayning to fly, drew them to a disordered pursue. And so they excuse the fortune of the day.

And thus my noble Lord, haue I, in the straightest course, the vneuen compasse of Antiquitie could direct mee, got ouer the wide and intricate passage of those times, that lay beyond the worke I purpose more particularly to deliuer.

OF THE HISTORY OF ENGLAND.

Come now, (my Noble Lord of Rocheſter) to write of a time wherein the State of England receiued an alteration of lawes, cuſtomes, faſhion, manner of living, language, writing, with new formes of fights, fortifications, buildings, and generally an innouation in moſt things but Religion. So that from this mutation, which was the greateſt it euer had, wee are to beginne with a new account of an England, more in dominion abroad, more in State and abilitie at home, and of more honour and name in the world then heretofore: which by being thus vndone, was made, as if it were in her face to get more by her loſſes, then her better better fortunes. For as first the conquest of the Danes brought her to the intyreft Gouverne-ment shee euer posselt at home, and made her most redoubted of all the kingdomes of the North: so did this of the Norman by coming in vpon her, make a way to let her out, and stretch her mightie armes over the Seas, into the goodly Prouinces of the South. For before these times, the English nation frō their first establishment in this Land, about the space of 500. yeares, neuer made any fally out of the Isle, vpon any other part of the worlde, but busied at home in a deuided State, held a broken gouernment with the Danes, and of no great regard, it seemes, with other nations, till Knute lead them foorth into the kingdome of Norwey, where they first shewed effects of their valour, and what they would bee, were they employed.

But the Normans hauing more of the sunne, and ciuilitie by their commixtion with the English, begat smother fashions, with quicker motions. And being a nation free from that dull disease of drinke, wherewith their former conquerours were naturally infected, induced a more comely temperance, with a neerer regard of reputation and honour. For whereas before, the English liued loose, in little homely cottages, where they spent all their reuenues in good fare, caring for little other other gaitie at all. Now after the Norman manner, they build them stately houses, prouide furnishments, erect Castles, after the architecture of France, which before were otherwise. They inclose parkes for their priuate pleasure, being debarred the general libertie of hunting, which heretofore they enioied: whereupon all the terms of building, hunting, tooles of workmen, names of most handy-crafts appertaining to the delights and adornments of life, came all to bee in French. And withall, the Norman habits, and fashion of liuing, became generally assumed, both in regard of nouelty, and to take away the note of difference; which could not be well lookt on in this change.

And though the body of our language remained the Saxon, yet it came so altered in the apparraile of the French tongue, as now wee hardly know it in the ancient forme it had; and not so much as the character wherein it was written, but was altdred to that of the Roman, and French now vsed.

But to the end wee may the better know the man, and the nation that thus subdued vs; wee must take our course vp to the head of their originals.

The Normans, wee finde to haue issued out of Norway and Denmarke, and were of like manuers, as the rest of those Northerne Countries: which by reason of the apt mixture of their phlegmaticque and sanguine complexions, with their promiscuous ingendring, without any tye of marriage, yeelded that continuall furchargement of people, as they were forced to vnburthen themselves on other Countries, wheresoeuer their violence could make them roome. And out of this redundancie, Roul, or Rou, a great Commander amongst them, furnished a robustious power in the time of King Alfrid, and first landed in England, (that euer lay in the Roade to all these inuaders) where finding no roome empty, nor any imploiment, was content (vpon some reliefe receiued) to vse his forces other where; which hee did against Rambalt, Duke of Frize, and Reignier Duke of Chanmont, and Hannalt: with whom hee had many violent encounters, and committed great spoiles in their Countries. Which done, hee passed along the coast of France, entred the mouth of Seine, and sackt all the Country vp to Roan: where the people hauing beene lately before miserably afflicted by Hasting, (another inuader of the same Nation) were so terrified by the approach of these new forces, that the Archbishoppe of Roan, by the consent of the people, offered him the obedience of that Citie, and the Countrie about, on condition hee would defend them, and minister Iustice according to the lawes of CHRIST, and the

Customes

Customes of the Countrie. For Charles the Simples, then King of France, yeelding no present succour, being otherwise imbroiled about the right of his Crowne, gaue him the opportunitie to plant him in that place, and to grow so powerfull, as shortly after he attempted the conquest of Paris, and gaue many notable defeats to the French Leaders. So that in the end, Charles was faine to buy his peace with the price of an alliance, and the whole Country of Nuestria (or Westrisb) which of the Normans was after called Normandy. And thereupon Roul became a Christian, and baptized, had the name of Robert, giuen by Robert, brother to Eudes, late King of France, who then stood in competition for that Crowne with Charles the Simples, and is said to haue vnder-aided Roul secretly, of purpose to make him friend his designs; though after hee vrged it an Article against Charles, the giuing away his Country, and the fauouring of strangers.

And thus came Roul to establish a State to his posteritie, ordering the same with that Iudgement and equitie, as hee left his name in a perpetuall reuerence, and his successors a firme foundation to plant vpon. From him, in a direct line, descended six Dukes of Normandie in the space of 120. yeeres: William, the first, Richard 1. Richard 2. who had two sonnes, Richard and Robert, that successiuely

Robert after hauing gouerned eight yeeres, (eithier meerely for deuotion,) which charity ought rather deame) or expiation for some secret guilt, wherewith his conscience might stand charged, about his brothers death (which because it was vntimely, might bee thought vnnaturall) resolues to visite the holy Sepulchre. And acquainting his Nobility therewithall, was by them much dissuaded, in regard hee had no issue: and that already they said, Alain, Earle of Britaine, and the Earle of Burgogne, were in contestation, who should succede him in the Dutchie: so that vpon his death, and their strife, the Countrie was like to become a prey to the Souldier, from which in conscience hee was bound by his best meanes to secure it. The Duke willed them to bee content. I haue (said hee) a little Bastard, of whose worthinesse, I haue great hope, and I doubt not but he is of my begetting: him will I inuest in the Dutchie as mine heire: And from hence forth I pray you take him for your Lord. The Earle of Britaine (notwithstanding his competition) to shew the affiance I haue in him, I will constitute his gouernor, and Seneschall of Normandy; the King of France shall be his Guardian, and so I will leaue him to God and your loialties.

Shortly after, the Bishops and Barons did their their homage to this base sonne, named William, who was the sixth Duke of Normandie after Roul, begotten on Arlette, a meane woman of Falaise. And Duke Robert taking his intended iourney, deliuers the child with his own hand, to Henrie 1. King of France, whom before hee had mainly aided in preserving his Crowne (left him by his father King Roberts Testament) against his elder brother, and his mother Constance, which with a great side of Nobilitie, stood for the right of Primogeniture, according to the custome of France: and therefore might the more presume (if good turnes done to Princes could weigh so much as their selfe-respects would not turne the skale) to haue had a faire discharge of his trust; and him for a Protector, whose power was best able to bee so. And causing the childe to doe homage for his Dutchie of Normandy, commits him to his Royall faith; departs his Court, and shortly after his life, in Asia. Whereupon his successour, but 9. yeeres of age, became obnoxious to all the miseries that afflict Princes in their pupillage: besides the reproach of his birth; which though his honour and vertue might get ouer, yet lay it euer a barre in his way and hindred his standing cleere, stood he neuer so high.

The Nobles of Normandy soone after his fathers death, by much intreatie, got him out of the French Kings hands, thinking the hauing him amongst them, would adde more grace to his Counsellors, and such as were in office: and the State of a Court, awe his State the better. But soone they found, the hauing his person without his power, was but to put them out into more discord and faction.

For presently followed the murthering and poisoning of Gouernors, displacing Officers, intrusion, supplantation, surprisings, and recovering of his person by a Nobilitie, stubborn, haughtie, and incompatible of each others precedencie or neernesse. But this was the least, as being done all for his person. Now followed more dangerous practises against it. His right was quarrelled by competitors, cleere in bloud, and great in meanes. Whereof the first (though farthest off in discent) was Roger de Tresny, bringing a faire line from Roul, and much prooffe of his owne worth, by hauing gotten great experience in the Sarazine warre in Spaine: whereby vpon his returne, entertaining and feasting the great and especiall men of worth, hee was growen powerful, well followed, and beloued of many: insomuch that at length, measuring his owne height, hee urges what wrong it was that a Bastard and a childe should bee preferred before him in the succession of that Duchie his Ancestors had noblie gotten: and what a shame shame the Normans, a people of that worth, would endure to be so gouerned; seeing they had others of the renowned race of Roule, William and Richard, Dukes of Normandie, of a lawfull and direct line, if they held him unworthie to inherite the State: and impatient (as is ambition that euer rides without raines) of anie long delay; brings his claime to a strong battaile in the field, which by the valiancie of Roger de Beaumont, was vtterly defeated, and himselfe with his two brethren slaine. Whereby all feare, that way, was extinguished, and the reputation of the Duke and his, so much advanced, as the King of France, (notwithstanding his tutelarie charge) tooke from him the Castle of Thuiliers, and demolisht it, pretending the insolencies committed there, by the Garrisons, vpon his subiects: and makes shew as yet, only to keepe things euen. But long it was not, ere he plainly bewraied his minde; aiding in person William Earle of Arques, brother to Duke Robert, and sonne to Richard 1: making his claime to the Dutchie, and brings a mightie armie to succour Arques, assieged by Cont Guiffard the Dukes Generall; who by a stratageme so trayned the French into an ambush, as he ouerthrew their whole power, and returns the King to Paris, with great losse and dishonor: leauing Arques the first Arch of triumph to this conquerour (not yet arriued to 17. yeeres of age) and the discomfited competitor, to seeke his fortunes with Eustace Earle of Bologne, finding vpon his returne little grace in Court, where fortune euer alters credite, and few regard men ouerthrowne.

This storme ouerpast, another succedes more dangerous; there liued with Duke William, a young Lord of like yeeres, named Guy, sonne to Regnalt, Earle of Borgogne, and Alix, daughter to Richard 2. who comming to bee sensible of his interest, was aduised by some stirring spirits, to attempt for the Dutchie, which they said appertained to him in right, and was wrongfully vsurped by the Bastard: And to aduance his purpose, happens deadly hostility betweene two of the greatest Lords of Normandie, Vicent Neele, and the Earle of Bessin, whose debate Duke William did not, or could not pacifie: This Guy (latelie made Earle of Bryorn, and Vernon, interposed himselfe to compose this discord; and by the aduice of Grimoult de Plessis (a principall mouer in this worke) so wrought, that either of these Lords, turned the point of their malice vpon him, who in their quarrell fauouring neither, made both to hate him; and easilie conspire with Guy to murder him at vnawares: which they had done, had not a certaine Foole whome, for being held a naturall they suspected not) noting their preparations, got away in the dead of the night to Valogne, knocking and crying at the gate, till he was admitted to the Dukes presence, whome he willed in all hast to flie, or he would be murdered. The Duke seeing the Foole in this affright, though dangers were not to be weighed by the worth of the reporter, but by their likelihood; and knowing his fortune was liable vnto all suddaine assassinations; instantly takes horse, and all alone postes to Fallaise, his especiall place of strength: on the way, his horse being tired, about breake of day, hee comes to a little village called Rie, where, by good fortune, the gentleman of the place, was standing at his dore readie to goe abroad; of whom the Duke enquires the next way to Fallaise: The gentleman perceiuing who he was (though as then verie vnwilling to be knowne) humbly craues the cause of his so strange and vntimely riding alone: The Duke seeing himselfe discovered, tels the occasion: the gentleman whose name was Robert de Rye, furnishes him with a fresh horse, and sendes two of his sonnes to conduct him the neere way to Fallaise: No sooner was he gone out of his sight, but after post the conspirators, enquiring of the same gentleman, whether he saw the Duke; who answered, that hee was gone a little before, such a way (shewing them a diuers path) and rode on with them, offering his seruice to Conte Bessin; of whom hee held that Village vnder the Duke. And so long hee led them about, that the Duke had recouered Fallaise. Whereupon, disappointed of their purpose, they returned into the Countries of Constantine, and Bessin, where they made themselves so powerfull, as the Duke withdrew him to Roan, and from thence to the King of France, to craue his aide, putting him in mind of the faithfull seruice his father had done him: how hee was his homager, vnder his tutelarie charge, and had no other sanctuarie of succour to flie vnto, in this case of his mutinous and turbulent nobilitie, the effect whereof was of dangerous consequence to that Crowne. And so farre vrged the importancie of reliefe, as the King at length (who seemed was yet content to haue him bee, though not too strong, and peradventure rather him then his competitor Guy de Burgogne) aided him in person with a puissant Armie against these competitors, whom they found in the vale of Dunes, with as great power and resolution to bid them battell, as they to assaile them. Heere one Guillefon, Vncle to Viconte Neel by the mother, forced his horse into the battallion of the French, and made at the King, and strake him downe with his Launce: which Conte Saint

Saint Paul perceiuing, hastes to encounter him with that violence, as both fell to the earth. But Guillefon soone gets vp, and though his horse was slaine vnder him by Chastillon, hee escapes out of the presse, and after fled into Apulia, with others. The King recouered, and more inkindled with this affront, spared not his person, to auenge his wrath. Duke William likewise (as it stood him most vpon) shewed effects of an all-daring and magnanimous Prince. And yet had not Ralf de Tesson been false to his fellowes to recouer faith with him, he had not carried (as hee did) the victorie. After which, diuers of the conspirators (who had too great hearts to yeeld) passed the mountaines into Italie, to Robert Guiscard their countryman, (who of a priuate Gentleman, was now by his prowesse, become Lord of Apulia, Calabria, and Cicile, within the space of twelue yeeres) to whom they were exceeding welcome, and especiallie Guillefon, for hauing encountred with a King in the midst of his battell, which made him of wider note.

But the better to know what starre these Norman spirits had, as borne for the reuolutions of those times, it shall not lie out of our way to shew, how they first came into Italie vpon this occasion. There happened a debate betweene one Osmund Drengot, and William

Repostel, Gentlemen both valiant, and of great parentage in Normandie, who as they hunted in the forrest of Rouuerie (nere Rouan) with Duke Robert, Drengot slew Repostel in his presence; and fearing the furie of the Duke, and the friends of the slaine, fled to Rome, and so to Naples, where hee, with his small companie of Normans that followed him, was entertained of the Duke de Bencuento, to serue him against the Saracins and Africans, which miserablie infested Apulia and Calabria at that time. The bruit of which entertainment was no sooner spread in Normandie, but diuers valiant Gentlemen and Souldiers, allured with the hope of good fortune, passed the Alpes, got to their Nation, and so wrought, as they grew formidable to these Barbarians, and in the end, vtterly chased and extinguished them. The Calabrians and Apulians, seeing themselues rid of their enemies, would haue been glad likewise (their turne serued) to be rid of their friends, and either vsing them more vnkindly then of custome, or they presuming more of desert, turned their swords vpon their entertainers. And first got a little place, which they fortified for their Rendeuous, and receit of bootie; and so augmenting still their winnings, obtained Territories, Cities, and Fortresses. After the death of Drengo, succeeded other gallant Leaders; and at length

Tancred Signor de Hauteuille, in Constantine, with his 12. sonnes, came into Apulia, of whom his third sonne Robert, surnamed Guiscard, attained the commaund, and was a man of a faire stature, cleere iudgement, and indefatigable courage. He conquered all Apulia, Calabria and Cicile, passed the Sea into Greece; relieued Michael Diocrisius, Emperor of Constantinople, defeated Nicephorus that vsurped the Empire; and shortly after Alexius attempting the like: and in one yeere vanquished two Emperours, the one of Greece, the other of Germanie: Swaied the whole estate of Italie, and was in a faire way to haue attained the Empire of Constantinople for himselfe, had he not died in the expedition.

Beomond his eldest sonne, by his first wife, became after Prince of Antioch, and is much renowned in the holie warres. Roger (of his second marriage with the daughter of the Prince of Salerno) succeeded in the States of Italic; as more theirs by birth and blood. His daughters were all highly married; Thus from a priuate gentleman, came this famous Norman to leaue a succession of Kings, and Princes after him, and died the same yeere as did this William, his concurrent in the loue and fauour of fortune.

And to this man fled all the discontented and desperate Normans, during these ciuill warres warres the Duke had with so many competitors: and every overthrow hee gaue them, augmented Guiscards forces in Italie; and especially this battell of Dunes; which ended not the Dukes trauailes, for Guy de Burgogne escaping the fight, fortified the Castles of Briorn and Verneuille, but in the end was faine to render them both, and himselfe, to the Dukes mercie, and became his pencioner, who was his competitor; which act of clemencie in the Duke, brought in manie other to submit themselues; whereby they reobtained their seigniories, but had their Castles demolished.

Hauiing ended this worke, new occasion to keepe him in action, was ministred by Geoffrey Martle, Earle of Aniou, who warring vpon the Poiteuins, incroached also vpon his neighbours States, and vsurped Alençon, Dampfront, and Passais, members of the Duchie of Normandie: which to recouer, the Duke leaues an Armie, and first got Alençon, where, for that he was opprobriousslie skorned by the besieged (who when they saw him, would crie La Pel, La Pel, in reproach of the basenesse of his mother, and the trade of the place of his birth) hee shewed extreme crueltie. Then laies hee siege to Dampfront; which to relieue, Cont Martel comes with his greatest forces: and the Duke to take notice of his strength, strength, sends out Roger de Mongomerie, with two other Knights to deliuer this message to the Earle; that if he came to victuall Dampfront, he should find him there the Porter to keepe him out: whereto the Earle returnes this answer: Tel the Duke, to morrow by day breake, he shall haue mee there on a white horse, readie to giue him the combate, and I will enter Dampfront if I can; And to the end he shall know me, I will weare a shield d'or, without anie devise.

Roger replies, Sir you shall not need to take that Paines, for to morrow morning, you shall haue the Duke in this place, mounted on a bay horse; And that you may know him, hee shall weare on the point of his Launce, a streamer of taffata, to wipe your face. Herewith returning, each side prepares for the morning; when the Earle, busie in ordering his battels, was aduertised by two horsemen that came crossing the field, how Dampfront, for certaine, was rendred to the Duke; whereupon in great rage, he presently departs with his army: whereof a part was (in passing a streight) cut off, by Vicount Neel, who for that seruice, redeemed his former offence, and was restored to the Dukes fauour, whome euer after he faithfullie serued. Those of Dampfront, desperate of succour, presently yeeld themselues to the Duke, who with his engines and forces remoues from thence to Hambrières, a frontier towne of Cont Martels, and by the way (had it not beene by him selfe discouered) hee had beene vtterly ouerthrowne by, an ambush, which gaue him much to doe and lost him verie manie braue men. Where-with he grew so iraged, that he forced into the troupes of his enemies; made at Cont Martell, stracke him downe with his sword, claue his helmet, and cut off an eare: but yet he escaped out of the preasse, though diuers were taken, and the Aniouiins vtterly defeated.

Whilst thus he was traouelling with an outward enemy, two more were found at home, to conspire against him. William Gnelan, Earle of Mortagne, descended from Richard the second. And William Earle of Eu, and Montreuil, issuing from William, the brother of the same Richard, and of Esselin, Countesse of Montreuil: the first vpon suspition, the other vpon prooffe, of an intention, was banished, and their estates seized: the Earldome of Mortagne he gaue to Robert: that of Eu to Odo, (after Bishoppe of Bayeux) both his brethren by the mother.

These assaults from abroad, these skornes, conspiracies, and vnder-workings at home, hee passed before he was full 22. yeeres of age: and thus his enemies made him, that sought to vndoe him. But now, more to vnderfet and strengthen strengthen his State, against future practises, hee conuokes an assemblie of his Prelates, Barons, and Gentlemen, causing them to receiue their oath of fealty, and raze their castels. Which done, he married Matilde, the daughter of Baldouin, 5. Earle of Flaunders, but not without contract and trouble: for his vncler Mauger, Archbishop of Roan, excommunicates him, for matching within the forbidden degrees of kindred: shee being daughter to Elinor, daughter to Richard the 2. and so his fathers sisters daughter. To expiate for which offence, (vpon a dispensation from Pope Victor) they were enioined the building of certaine Hospitals for blind people: and two Abbeys, the one for men, the other for women: which were erected at Caen.

This match, and the ouer-matching his enemies, set him so high a marke of enuie in the eye of France, which naturally loued not the Normans (whom in reproach they vsually called Trewans) as: they easilie incensed their King, who of himselfe was forward enough, to abate a power, growne so out of proportion, with the rest of the Princes of his dominions, to finde a quarrell (which conserues easilie doe) to set vpon him: and to make it looke the fairer, pretendes to correct the insolencies of the Normans, committed on his territories, and to relieue Count Martell, opprest by the Duke; besides allcading, it concern'd him in honour and iustice, to haue that Prouince, which held of his Crowne, to be gouerned by a Prince of lawfull blood, according to Christian order and lawes Ecclesiasticall: and therefore resolueth vterly to exterminate the Duke, and establish a legitimate Prince in the Dutchy. For which effect, two armies are gathered from all parts of his Kingdome; the one sent along the riuer Sein, the other into the Country of Bessin, as meaning to incompasse it.
N 2                      opprest,

The Duke likewise diuides his forces into two parts: sends his brother Odo, Earle of Eu, Walter Guiffard Earle of Longueuill, and others with the one, to the Country of Caux, himselfe with the other takes towards Eureux, (to make head to the King that was at Mant) and withdrawes all cattell and prouisions out of the flat Countrie, into Cities and Fortresses, for their owne store, and disfurnishment of theemie. The Kings armie marching from Beauuois, to Mortimer, and finding there a fat Countrie full of all prouisions, betooke them to make good cheere, and restes there all that night; thinking the Norman forces were yet with the Duke at Eureux; which the armie in Caux, conducted by Odo vnderstanding, marched all night, and by breake of day, gaue them so hot an alarme, and and so sodaine, as put them all in rout, leauing horse, and armour, and all to the assailants; who made such a destruction of them, as of 40. thousand, not the fourth part escaped.

With this defeature, the King of France is againe returned home, with great rage and griefe, and the Duke, with the redemption of the prisoners, recouers his peace, and the Castle of Thuilliers, taken from him in his vnder-age. Cont Martell though much dismayed with the Kings ouerthrow, yet leaues not to make some attempts for the recouering his Townes; but with no successe. The Duke he saw was too well beloued and followed, for him to doe any good without a stronger arme. Wherefore the next spring, he goes againe to importune the King of France, to aide him against the Duke: who (hee said) was now growne so insolent vpon this peace, and the victorie he had stolne, and not wonne, that there was no liuing for his neighbours neere him: besides the Normans had the French in such derision, and base esteeme, as they made their act at Mortimer their onely sport, and the subiect of their rimes: as if a King of France, vpon the losse of a few men, was retired, and durst not breake a dishonourable peace.

With which instigation, and being stung with with the touch of reproach (he raises another Army farre mightier then before, wherein were three Dukes, and twelue Earles, and notwithstanding the solemne peace made, and so lately sworne with the Duke, hee enters Normandie in the haruest time, ouerrunnes and spoiles all the Countrie, along the Coast to Bessin: from whence marching to Bayeux, and Caen, with purpose to passe the riuer Diue at Varneuille, to destroy the Countries of Auge, Lisieux, and Roumoys, euen to Roan: and finding the case-way long, and the bridge narrow, caused his vanguard to passe ouer first: and, to secure his Arierguard, conducted by the Duke of Berie, himselfe staies behind in Caen, till his people, and their carriages were passed. Duke William, who all this while, stores his fortresses with men and victuall, makes himselfe as strong in the Towne of Falaise, as he could; hath no armie in the feld, but a running campe to be readie to take all aduantages: lets the furie of the storme spend it selfe, and hauing aduertisement of this passage, marched all night with 10. thousand men, and in the morning early, sets vpon the Arierguard, with so sodaine a crie and furie, as they who were before on the Case-way hearing this noise behinde, thrust forward their fellowes, halting to get ouer the bridge, with such a crowd and preasse, as they brake it, and many were drownd in the riuer. They who were gotten ouer, could not returne to aide the rest; nor the King, by reason of the Marishes on both sides (yeeld any succour to his people; but stood a spectator of their slaughter, and the taking of sixe of his Earles, of whome one was the exiled Earle of Eu, whom the King (fauoring his great worth) had made Cont De Soissons.

The grieue of this ouerthrow, shortly after gaue the King of France his death, and the Duke of Normandie a ioisfull peace, which he nobly imployed in the ordering and adorning his State: building, endowing, and decking Monasteries and Churches: gathering reliques from all parts to furnish his Abbeyes at Caen, (where he also erected a Tombe for himselfe and his wife) feasting and rewarding his Nobles and men of worth: whereby he so possesse him of the hearts of all his people generallie, as they were entirely his, for what he would.

During this calme of his life, hee makes a journey ouer into England, as if to visite King Edward his kinsman: who, in regard of the preseruation, and breeding he had in Normandy, by Duke Richard the second, (Grandfather to them both) gaue him most roiall entertainment: And here he shewed himselfe; and here no doubt hee found matter for his hopes to worke on. In this enteruiew hee discovered England, being to bee presupposed, hee came not to gather cockle-shells, on the shore. Nor was it long after ere Herald, (whether of purpose to ratifie some paction closely contriued betwixt them: or by casualty of weather driuen into France, (and so faine to make it seeme a iourney of purpose to the Duke is not certainly deliuered) was gallantly entertained in Normandie, presented with all shewes of Armes, brought to Paris, and there likewise feasted in that Court. And at his returne to Rouen, something was concluded, either in likeli-hood to diuide the Kingdome betweene them, or that Herauld being a coast-dweller, and had the strongest hand in the state, should let in the Duke, and doe his best to helpe him to the Crowne, vpon conditions of his owne greatnesse, or whatsoeuer it was; promises were made and confirmed by oathes vpon the Euangelists, and all the sacred Reliques at Rouen, in the presence of diuers great persons. Besides for more assurance, Harald was fianced to Adeliza, the Dukes daughter, and his brother Wolnat left a pledge for the performance.

This intercourse made the transaction of the fate of England, and so much was done, either by King Edward or Harald (though neither act, if any such were, was of power to preiudice the State, or alter the course of a right succession) as gaue the Duke a colour to claime of the Crowne, by a donation made by Testament, which being against the Law and custome of the Kingdome, could be of no validity at all. For the Crowne being held, not as Patrimoniall, but in a succession by remotion (which is a succeeding to another place) it was not in the power of King Edward to collate the same by any dispositive and testamentary will, the right descending to the next of blood, onely by the Custome and Law of the Kingdome: For the Successour is not sayde properly to bee the heire of the King, but the Kingdome, which makes him so, and cannot be put from it by any act of his Predecessour. But this was onely his claime; the right was of his owne making, and no otherwise. For as soone as he had heard of the death of King Edward, with the election, and Coronation of Harald, (for they came both together) hee assembles the States of Normandy, and acquaints them with the right hee had to England, soliciting an extention of their utmost meanes for his recovery thereof, and auengement of the perjur'd Usurper Harald; shewing them apparant probability of successe, by infallible intelligence he had from the State, his strong party therein, with the debilitie and distraction of the people; What glory, wealth, and greatnesse, it would adde to their Nation, the obtaining of such a Kingdome, as was thus opportunely laide open for them, if they apprehended the present occasion. All which remonstrances notwithstanding, could induce but very few to like of this attempt, and those, such who had long followed him in the warres, exhausted their estates, and content to runne vpon any aduenture that might promise likelyhood of aduancement. The rest were of diuers opinions: some, that it was sufficient to hold and defend their owne countrey; without hazarding themselves, to conquer others; and these were men of the best ability: others were content to contribute, but so sparingly, as would little aduance the businesse: and for the most part they were so tyred with the former warres, and so desirous to embrace the blessing of peace, as they were vnwilling to vndergo a certaine trouble for an vncertaine good. And with these oppositions, or faint offers, the Dukes purpose, at first, had so little way, as did much perplex him: At length, seeing this protraction, and difficulty in generall: hee deales with his neere and most trusty friends in particular, being such as hee knew affected the glory of action, and would aduventure their whole estates with him. As William fitz-Auber, Conte de Breteuille, Gualter Guifford Earle of Loguenille, Roger, Signor de Beaumont, with others, especially his owne brothers, Odo Bishop of Bayeux, and Robert Earle of Mortaigne:

taine: these in full assembly hee wrought to make their offers: which they did in so large a proportion; and especially William Fitz-Auber (who made the first offer, to furnish forty ships with men and munition; the Byshoppe of Bayeux. 40. the Byshop of Mans. 30. and so others, according or beyond their abilities) as the rest of the assemblie, doubting if the action succeeded without their helpe (the Duke arriuing to that greatnesse) would beare in minde, what little minde they shewed to aduance his desires, beganne to contribute more largely.

The Duke finding them yeelding, though not in such sort as was requisite for such a worke; dealt with the Bishops and great men a part, so effectually, as at length hee got of them seuerally that, which of all together hee could neuer haue compassed, and causing each mans contribution to be registred; inkindled such an emulation amongst them, as they who lately would do nothing, now strined who should doe most.

And not onely wan hee the people of his owne Prouinces, to vndertake this action, but drew by his faire perswasions and large promises, most of the greatest Princes and Nobles of France, to aduventure their persons, and much of their estate with him: as Robert fitz-Harnayes, Duke of Orleance, the Earles of
O 2 Bretaigne,

Bretaigne, Ponthieu, Bologne, Poictou, Mayne, Neuers, Hiesms, Aumal; Le Signors de Tours, and euen his mortall enemy Martel, Earle of Aniou, became to bee as forward as any. All which, hee sure could neuer haue induced, had not his vertues and greatnesse gained a wide opinion and reputation amongst them.

Although in these aduancements and turnes of Princes, there is a concurrency of dispositions, and a constitution of times prepared for it: yet it is strange, that so many mighty men of the French nation, would aduenture their liues and fortunes to adde England to Normandy, to make it more then France, and so great a Crowne to a Duke, who was too great for them already. But where mutations are destined, the counsels of men must bee corrupted, and there will fall out all aduantages to serue that businesse.

The King of France, who should haue strangled this disseigne in the birth, was a childe, and vnder the curature of Baldouin, Earle of Flanders, whose daughter the Duke had married, and was sure to haue rather furtherance then any opposition that way: Besides, to amaze that Court, and dazell a young Prince, hee promised faithfully, if hee conquered this kingdome; to hold it of the King, as hee did the Dutchie of Normandie, and doe him homage for the same; which would adde a great glory glory to that Crowne. Then was hee before hand with Pope Alexander, (to make religion giue reputation and auowment to his pretended right) promising likewise to hold it of the Apostolique See, if hee preuailed in his enterprize. Whereupon the Pope sent him a Banner of the Church, with an Agnus of gold, and one of the hayres of Saint Peter. The Emperour Hen. 4. sent him a Prince of Almayne with forces, but of what name, or his number, is not remembred: so that wee see it was not Normandie alone that subdued England, but a collected power out of all France and Flanders, with the aydes of other Princes. And by these meanes made hee good his vndertaking, and within eight monethes was ready furnished with a powerfull army at Saint Valerie in Normandie, whence hee transported the same into England in 896. ships, as some write. And this was the man, and thus made to subdue England.

And now hauing gotten, the great and difficult battaile, before remembred, at Hastings, the foureteenth of October, 1066. he marched without any opposition to London, where Edwin and Morchar, Earles of Northumberland, and Mercland, brothers of eminent dignitie and resp. ct in the kingdome, had laboured with all their power to stirre the harts of the people for the conseruation of the State, and establishing Edgar Atheling, the next of the Royall issue, and his right of the Crowne: whereunto other of the Nobility had likewise consented, had they not seene the Bishops auerse or wauering. For, as then to the Clergie any King (so a Christian) was all one: they had their Prouince a parte, deuided from secular domination: and of a Prince (though a stranger) who had taken vp so much of the world before hand, vpon credite and fame of his pietie and bonntie, they could not but presume well for their estate: and so were content to giue way to the present Fortune.

The Nobilitie, considering they were so borne, and must haue a King: not to take him that was of power to make himselfe, would shew more of passion then prouidence: and to be now behinde hand to receiue, with more then submission, was as if to withstand: which (with the distrust of each others faith) made them stricke and runne headlong who should be first to preoccupate the grace of seruitude, and intrude them into forraine subiection.

The Commons, like a strong vessell that might haue bene for good vse, was heereby left, without a sterne, and could not moue but irregularly. So that all estates in generall either corrupted with new hopes, or transported with feare, forsooke themselves, and their distressed distressed Countrey. Vpon his approach to London the gates were all set open: the Archbishop of Canterburie, Stigand, with other Bishops, the Nobility, Magistrates, and people, rendering themselves in all obedience vnto him: and he returning plausible protestations of his future gouernment, was on Christmas day, then next following, crowned King of England at Westminster, by Aldred, Archbishop of Yorke, for that Stigand was not held canonically inuested in his See: and yet thought to haue bene a forward mouer of this alteration.

Here, according to the accustomed forme, at his Coronation, the Bishops and Barons of the Realme, tooke their oath, to be his true and loiall subiects, and he reciprocally (being required thereunto by the Archbishop of Yorke) made his personall oath, before the Altar of Saint Peter, to defend the holy Churches of God, and the Rectors of the same: to gouerne the vniuersall people, subiect vnto him, iustly: to establish equall lawes, and to see them duely executed. Nor did hee euer claime anie power by conquest, but as a regular Prince, submitted himselfe to the orders of the kingdome: desirous rather to haue his Testamentarie title (howsoeuer weak) to make good his succession, rather then his sword. And though the Title of Conquerer by the flattery of the time, was after giuen him, hee shewed by all the course of his gouernment hee assumed it not: introducing none of all those alterations, (which followed) by violence, but a mild gathering vpon the disposition of the State, and the occasions offered, and that by way of reformation. And now taking hostages for his more securitie, and order for the defence and gouernment of his kingdome, at the opening of the spring next, he returnes into Normandie, so to settle his affaires there, as they might not distract him from his businesse in England, that required his whole powers.
Conqueror

And to leaue here all sure behind him, hee commits the rule of the kingdome, to his brother the Bishop of Bayeux, and to his cousin Fitz-Auber, whom he had made Earle of Hereford, taking with him all the chiefe men of England, who were likeliest to be heads to a revolt. As Edger Atheling, the Arch-bishop Stigand, lately discontented: Edwyn, and Morchar, with many other Bishops and Noble men: Besides to vnburthen his charge, and dis-impester his Court; hee tooke backe with him all the French aduenturers, and such as were vnecessary men, rewarding them as faire as his treasure would extend, and the rest he made vp in faire promises.

In his absence, which was all that whole sommer, sommer, nothing was heere attempted against him, but onely that Edric, surnamed the Forrester, in the Countie of Hereford, called in the kings of the Welsh to his aide, and forraged onely the remote borders of that Countrey. The rest of the kingdome stood quiet, expecting what would become of that new world, wherein as yet they found no great alteration, their lawes and liberties remaining the same they were before, and might hope by this accession of a new Prouince, the state of England would bee but enlarged in dominion abroad, and not impaired in profit at home, by reason the nation was but small, and of a plentifull, and not ouer-peopled Countrey, likely to impester them.

Having disposed his affaires of Normandy, hee returnes towards winter, into England, where hee was to satisfie three sorts of men: first such aduenturers, with whom hee had not yet cleered: Secondly, those of his owne people, whose merites or neernesse, looked for recompence, whereof the number beeing so great, many must haue their expectations fed, if not satisfied: Thirdly, the people of this kingdome, by whom hee must now subsist, for being not able with his owne Nation, so to impeople the same, as to hold and defend it (if hee should proceed to an extirpation of the naturall inhabitants) hee was likewise to giue

Wherein hee had more to doe then in his battell at Hastings; seeing all remunerations, with supplies of money, must bee raised out of the stocke of the kingdome, which could not but bee irksome to the State in generall, and all preferments and dignities conferred on his, to be either by vacancies, or displacing others, which must needs breed very feeling grievances in particular. And yet wee finde no great men thrust out of their roome, but such as put themselves out, by reuolting after his establishment, and their fealty giuen. So that it seemes, hee contented himselfe and his, for the time, onely with what hee found heere ready, and with filling vp their places, who were slaine in the battell, or fled, as many were, with the sonnes of Harald out of the kingdome. Such Gentlemen as hee could not presently preferre, and had a purpose to aduance, hee dispersed abroad into Abbeyes, there to liue till places fell out for them: and 24. hee sent to the Abbey of Eley: whereby hee not onely lessened the multitude of attendants and suitors at Court; eased that eie-sore of strangers, but also had them a watch over the Clergy, who then were of great and eminent power in the kingdome, and might much preuaile with the people.

But the English Nobilitie, incompatible of these

these new concurrents; found notwithstanding, such a disproportion of grace, and darkening of their dignities, by the interposition of so many, as must needs lessen their splendour; that many of the chiefe, doubting to be more impaired in honour and estate, conspired together, and fled some into Scotland, and some into Denmarke, to trie if by aid from abroad, they might recouer themselves, and their lost fortunes againe at home. Amongst which, the chiefe was Edgar Atheling, (termed, Englands Darling, which shewed the peoples zeale to his bloud) who with his mother Agatha, and his two sisters Margaret and Christin, intending to retire into Hungarie, (their natie Countrey) were driuen by tempest on the coast of Scotland, where they were with all Hospitable comfort entertained by Malcolin. 3. whose former sufferings in his exile, had taught him to compassionate others like distresses; and whom it concerned now to looke to his owne, his neighbours house being thus on fire: and to foster a partie against so dangerous an in-commer, that was like to thrust them all out of dore. Which induced him not onely to entertaine this Prince, dispossessed of his right, but to enter league with him for the publike safety; And to inchaine it the stronger, hee takes to wife Margaret, the sister of Edgar, (a Ladie indued with all bleſſed vertues) by whom the bloud of our auncient Kings was preſerued, and conioyned with the Norman in Henric. 2. and ſo became Engliſh againe. Vnto Edgar in Scotland, repaired the Earles Edwin and Morchar, Hereward, Gofpatrice, Siward, with others: and ſhortly after Stigand and Aldred, Arch-Biſhops, with diuers of the Clergie: who in the third yeere of this kings raigne, raiſed very great commotions in the North, beyond Humber, and wrought moſt egerly to recouer their loſt Countrey: but being now too late, and the occaſion not taken before the ſetling of the gouernment, whileſt it was new and brangling, they preuailed nothing, but gaue aduantage to the conquerour, to make himſelfe more then he was: For all conſpiracies of ſubiects, if they ſuccede not, aduance to ſoueraigntie: and nothing gaue roote to the Norman planting heere, more then the petty reuolts made by diſcattered troupes, in ſeueral parts, begunne without order, and followed without reſolution; whereas nothing could bee done for a generall recouery, but by a generall ſubleuation of the people: for which all wary preuention was vſed, & they had waights enough laid on, to hold them downe. And though theſe Lordes imbroiled themſelues, and held him doing in the North, yet hee hauing all the South parts ſetled vnder his domination, with well practized and prepared forces, there could be little hope of good, whilſt all their great eſtates furniſht the Normans, both in ſtate and meanes to ruine them. The Earle-dome; and all the Lands which Edwyn held in Yorkſhire, were given to Alain, Earle of Britaigne, kinsman to the Conqueror; The Archbiſhopricke of Canterburie, conſerued on Lanfranc, Abbot of Caen. That of Yorke, on Thomas his Chaplaine, and all the reſt both of the Clergie and others, which were out, had their places within, ſupplied by Normans.

And after king William had appeaſed a commotion in the Weſt, which the ſonnes of Harrald, with forces out of Ireland had raiſed, and alſo reſpreſſed the rebellions of Exceſter, and Oxford; hee takes his iourney in perſon Northward with all expedition, leaſt the enemy there, ſhould growe too high in heart and opinion, vpon the great ſlaughter of his people, made at Yorke; and the defeature of his Brother & Leiutenant, Robert Earle of Mor-taigne, ſlaine with 700. Normans at Durham: where, at his firſt comming he ſo wrought, that hee either diſcomfited, or corrupted the generals of the Danicque forces, newly arrived to aid the Lords, and ſent by Swyn, King of Denmarke, vnder the conduct of his two ſons, Harrald and Knute, with a Naue of 300. ſaile: and after ſets vpon the army of the Lords, weakened both in strength and hope, by this departure of their confederates, and puts them to flight: Which done, hee viterly wasted, and layd desolate, all that goodly Countrie betwixt Yorke and Durham, the space of 60. myles, that it might be no more a succour to the enemy. And the like course hee vsed on all the Coasts where any apt landings lay for inuasions; and so returnes to London.

Most of the Lords after this great defeate, came in, vpon publique faith giuen them, and were conducted to Barkeshamsted, by the Abbot Fredericke; where, vpon their submission, oath of alleageance retaken, they had their pardon, and restitution of grace graunted by the King, who it seemes was so willing to acquite them, that againe hee takes his personall oath before the Archbishop Lanfranc, and the Lords, to obserue the ancient lawes of the Realme, established by his Noble predecessors the kings of England, and especially those of S. Edward. Whereupon these stormy dispositions held calme a while.

But long it was not ere many of these Lords (whether vpon intelligence of newe hopes, from Edgar (who was still in Scotland) or growne desperate with newe displeasures, at home, finding small performance of promises, made rupture of oath, and all other respects, and and brake out againe. The Earle Edwin, making towards Scotland, was murdered by his owne people. The Lords Morchar, and Hereward, betooke them to the Isle of Eley, meaning to make good that place for that winter; whither also repaired the Earle Syward, and the Bishop of Durham out of Scotland. But the King, who was no time-giuer vnto growing dangers, beset all the Isle with flat boates on the East, and made a bridge of two miles long on the West, and safely brought in his people vpon the enemy; who seeing themselves surprized, yeelded all to the Kings mercy, except Hereward, who desperately marched with his people through the Fennes, and recovered Scotland: The rest were sent to diuers prisons, where they dyed, or remained during the kings life.

Those Lords who persisted loyall vpon this last submission, were all imployed and well graced with the king, as Edric the Forrester, (and first that rebelled in his raigne) was held in cleere trust, and neere about him. Gospatrice hee made Earle of Northumberland, and sent him against Malcolin, who in this time, subdues the Countries of Tisdale, Cleueland, and Comberland. Waltheof, sonne to the Earle Syward, hee held so worthie to be made his, as he married him to his neece Iudith, though hee had beene a principall Actor in the Northerne commotion, commotion, ( and in defending the City of Yorke against him, is said to haue stricken off the heades of diuers Normans, one by one, as they entered a breach, to the admiration of all about him ) shewing therein that true touch of the noblest nature, to loue vertue, euen in his enemies.

And now seeing Scotland to bee the speciall retreat for all conspiratours; and discontented in his kingdome, yeelding them continuall succour and assistance, and where his competitor Edgar liued, to beget and nurse perpetuall matter for their hopes, and at hand for all advantages: hee enters that kingdome with a puissant Armie; which incountring with more necessities then forces, soone grew tired; and both kings, considering of what difficulties the victorie would consist, were willing to take the safest way to their ends, and vpon faire ouvertures, to conclude a peace: Articling for the bounds of each kingdome, with the same title of dominion, as in former times: All delinquents, and their partakers generally pardoned.

Heere with the vniuerfall turne of alteration, thus wrought in England, Scotland beeing a part of the body of this Isle, is noted to haue likewise had a share; and as in the Court of England, the French tongue became generally spoken; so in that of Scotland did the English, by reason of the multitude of this Nation, attending both the Queene and her brother Edgar, and daily repairing thither for their safetie, and combination against the common enemy: of whome diuers abandoning their native distressed Countrey, were by the bounty of that King preferred: and there planted, spread their off-spring into manie noble families, remaining to this day. The titles for distinguishing degrees of honour; as of Duke, Marquesse, Earle, Baron, Rider or Knight, were then (as is thought) first introduced: and the nobler sort began to be called by the title of their Signories (according to the French manner) which before bare the name of their Father, with the addition of Mac, after the fashion of Ireland. Other innouations, no doubt, entred there likewise at the opening of this wide mutation of ours: fashion and imitation like weedes easily growing in euery soyle.

Shortly after this late made peace, Edgar Etheling voluntarily came in, and submitted himselfe to the King, being then in Normandie, and was restored to grace, and a faire maintenance, which held him euer after quiet. And it made well at that time for the fortune of the King, howsoever for his owne, being thought to haue ill-timed his affaires (either through want of seasonable intelligence, or dispaire of successes) in making too soone that submission, which was later or neuer to haue bene done. For in this absence of the King, Roger fitz Anber, the yongue Earle of Hereford, contrarie to his expresse commandement, gave his sister in marriage to Ralph Waher, Earle of Northfolke, and Suffolke, and at the great solemnization thereof, the two Earles conspired with Eustace Earle of Boloigne (who secretly came ouer to this festiual) and with the Earle Waltheof, and other English Lords, to call in the Danes, and by maine power to keepe out and dispossesse the King. Who hauing thus passed ouer so many gulfes of forraine dangers, might little imagine of any wracke so neere home; and that those, whom hee had most aduanced, should haue the especiall hand in his destruction: But no rewards are benefits, that are not held so, nor can euer cleere the accounts with them that ouer-value their merits. And had not this conspiracie bene opportunely discouered (which some say was by the Earle Waltheof, moued with the vgliness of so foule an ingratitude) they had put him againe to the winning of England. But nowe the fire bewraied before it flamed, was soone quenched by the diligence of Odon the Kings Vice-gerent, the Bishop of Worcester and others, who kept the conspiratours from ioyning their forces: So that they neuer came to make any head, but were either surprized, or forced to flie: The Earle Roger Fitz-Anber was taken, and some say executed; and so was shortly after the Earle Waltheof, whose dissent from the act, could not get him pardon for his former consent, though much compassion in respect of his great worthinesse. But the wide dissent of these tumors, fed from many secret veines, seemed to bee of that danger, as required this extremitie of cure, especially in a part so apt for infection, vpon any the like humors.

For this conspiracie seemes to take motion from a generall league of all the neighbour Princes hereabout, as may well bee gathered by their seuerall actions. First in the King of France, by defending Dole in Britaigne (a Castle of Raph de Waher) against the King of England, and in likelihood, imploying the Earle of Boloigne towards the conspirators: In Swayne King of Denmarke, by sending a Nany of two hundreth saile, vnder the conduct of his sonne Knute, and others. In Drone King of Ireland, by furnishing the sonnes of Harald with 65. ships. In Malcoline; and the Kings of Wales, by their readinesse to assist. But the Danes being on the coast, and hearing how their confederates had sped, with the great preparations the king had made, after some pillage taken vpon the shores of England and Flanders, returned home, and neuer after arrined to disturbe this land. Though in Anno Reg. 19. Knute, then king of Denmarke, after the death of Swaine, intending to repaire the dishonor of his two last adueutures past, and put for the Crowne of England, his predecessors had holden, prepared a Naue of a thousand saile, and was aided with sixe hundreth more by Robert le Frison, Earle of Flanders (whose daughter hee had married.) But the windes held so contrary for two yeeres together, as vterly quasht that enterprize, and freed the king and his successors for euer after from future molestation that way.

But this businesse put the State to an infinit charge, the King entertaining all that time, besides his Normans, Hugh, brother to the King of France, with many companies of French. Finding the English (in respect of many great families allied to the Danes) to incline rather to that nation, then the Norman, and had experience of the great and neere intelligence continually passing betweene them.

And these were all the warres he had within the kingdome, sauing in Anno Regni 15. hee subdued Wales, and brought the kings there, to doe him homage.

His warres abroad, were all about his dominions in France, first raised by his owne sonne Robert, left Lictenant gouernour of the Dutchie of Normandy, and the Countie of Mayne, who in his fathers absence, tasting the glorie of command, grew to assume the absolute rule of the Prouince, causing the Barons there, to doe him homage as Duke, not as Lictenant, & leagues him with the King of France, who working vpon the easinesse of his youth and ambition, was glad to apprehend that occasion to disioinct his estate, who was growne too great for him. And the profuse largesse and disorderly expence whereto Robert was addicted, is nourished by all wayes possible, as the meanes to imbarke him in those difficulties of still getting money, that could not but needes yeeld continuall occasion to intertaine both his owne discontent, and theirs, from whom his supplies must bee raised. And though thereby hee purchased him the title of Courtois, yet hee lost the opinion of good gouernment, and constrained the estates of Normandie, to complaine to his father of the great concussion, and violent exactions hee vsed amongst them.

The King vnderstanding the fire thus kindled in his owne house, that had set others all in combustion, hastes with forces into Normandie to haue surprized his sonne; who aduertised of his comming, furnished with 2000. men at armes, by the King of France, lay in ambush where hee should passe; sets vpon him him, defeated most of his people, and in the pursuite hapned to incounter with himselfe, whom he vnhors'd, and wounded in the arme, with his Lance; but perceiuing by his voyce, it was his father, hee hasted to remounte him, humbly crauing pardon for his offence: which the father (seeing in what case hee was) granted, howsoeuer hee gaue; and vpon his submission, tooke him with him to Rouen; whence, after cured of his hurt, hee returned with his sonne William (likewise wounded in the fight) into England.

Long was it not ere hee was againe inform'd of his sonnes remutyning, and how hee exacted vpon the Normans, vsurpt the intire gouernement, and vrged his fathers promise thereof, made him before the King of France, vpon his Conquest of England: which caused his little stay here, but to make preparations for his returne into those parts: whether in passing he was driuen on the Coast of Spaine, but at length arriuing at Burdeaux, with his great preparations, his sonne Robert came in, and submitted himselfe the second time: whom hee now tooke with him into England, to frame him to a better obedience, imploying him in the hard and necessary warres of Scotland, (the late peace beeing betweene the two Kings againe broken) and after sent him backe, and his yong sonne Henry, with the association association of charge and like power (but of more trust) to the gouernment of Normandy.

After the two Princes had bene there a while they went to visite the King of France at Constance, where feasting certaine daies, vpon an after dinner, Henry wanne so much at chesse of Louis, the Kings eldest sonne, as hee growing into choller, called him the sonne of a Bastard, and threw the Chesse in his face. Henry takes vp the Chesse-borde, and strake Louis with that force, as drew bloud; and had killed him, had not his brother Robert come in the meane time, and interposed himselfe: Whereupon they suddenly tooke horse, and with much adoe they recovered Pontoise, from the kings people that pursued them.

This quarrell arising, vpon the intermeeting of these Princes (a thing that seldome breeds good bloud amongst them) re-inkindled a heate of more rancour in the fathers, and beganne the first warre betweene the English and French. For presently the king of France, complots againe with Robert (impatient of a partner) enters Normandy, and takes the Citie of Vernon. The King of England inuades France, subdues the Countrie of Zaintonge and Poitou, and returnes to Rouen, where the third time, his sonne Robert is reconciled vnto him, which much disappoints and vexes the king of France, who thereupon, summons the king of of England, to doe him homage for the kingdome of England, which he refused to doe, saying, he held it of none but God and his sword. For the Dutchie of Normandie he offers him homage: but that would not satisfie the King of France, whom nothing would, but what he could not haue the Maiestie: and seekes to make any occasion the motiue of his quarrell: and againe inuades his territories, but with more losse then profite. In the end they conclude a certaine crazie peace, which held no longer then King William had recouered a sicknes, whereinto (through his late trauell, age, and corpulencie) he was faine: at which time, the King of France, then young and lusty, icasting at his great belly, whereof hee said, he lay in at Rouen, so irritated him, as being recouered, he gathers all his best forces, enters France in the chiefeft time of their fruites, making spoile of all in his way, till he came euen before Paris; where the King of France then was; to whom he sendes, to shew him of his vp-sitting, and from thence marched to the Citie of Mants, which he vtterly sackt, and in the destruction thereof, gat his owne, by the straine of his horse, among the breaches, and was thence conueied sicke to Rouen, and so ended all his warres.

His gouern-
ment in peace.

dome thus gotten; first after hee had repress the conspiracies in the North, and well quieted all other parts of the State (which nowe beeing absolutely his, hee would haue to bee ruled by his owne law) beganne to gouerne all by the customes of Normandy. Whereupon the agreed; Lords and sadde people of England, tender their humble petition, beseeching him, in regard of his Oath made at his Coronation: And by the soule of Saint Edward, from whom hee had the Crowne and kingdome; vnder whose lawes they were borne and bred; That hee would not adde that misery, to deliuer them vp to bee iudged, by a strange law they vnderstood not. And so earnestly they wrought, that hee was pleased to confirme that by his Charter, which hee had twice fore-promised by his oath: and gaue commandement to his Iusticiaries, to see those lawes of Saint Edward (so called, not that hee made them, but collected them out of Merchen-law, Dane-law, and Westsex-law) to bee inuiolable obserued throughout the kingdome. And yet notwithstanding this confirmation, and the Charters afterward granted by Hen. 1. Hen. 2. and King John, to the same effect, there followed a generall inno-uation both in the lawes and gouernment of England: So that this seemes rather done to acquiet the people with a shew of the contidoe; And seeing a difference in tongue, would continue a difference in affections; all meanes was wrought to reduce it to one Idiom, which yet was not in the power of the Conqueror to doe, without the extirpation or ouerlaying the Land-bred people: who being so farre in number as they were about the inuaders, both carry the maine of the language, and in few yeeres, haue those who subdued them, vndistinguishably theirs. For notwithstanding the former conquest by the Danes, and now this by the Norman, the solid bodie of the kingdome, still consisted of the English, and the accession of strange people, was but as Riuers to the Ocean, that changed not it, but were changed into it. And though the king laboured what hee could to turne all to French, by enioyning their children heere to vse no other language, with their Grammer in schooles, to haue the lawes practized in French, All petitions and businesse of Court, in French, No man graced but hee that spake French, yet soone after his dayes, all returnes naturall English againe, but law, and that still held forraigne, and became in the end wholly to bee inclosed in that language: nor haue wee now other marke of our subiection and inuassallage from Normandie, but only that, and that still speakes French to vs in England.

And herewithall new Termes, new Constitutions

tutions, new formes of Pleas, new Offices and Courts are now introduced by the Normans; a people more inured to litigation, and of spirits more impatient, and contentious, then were the English: who by reason of their continual warre (wherein law is not borne) and labour to defend the publicke, were more at vnitie in their priuate: and that small time of peace they had deuotion and good fellowship entertained.

For their lawes and constitutions before, wee see them plaine, brieve, and simple, without perplexities, hauing neither folde nor plaite, commaunding, nor disputing: their graunts and transactions as brieve and simple, which shewed them a cleere-meaning people, retaining still the nature of that plaine realnesse they brought with them, vncomposed of other fashion, then their owne, and vnaffected imitation.

For their tryals in cases criminall, where manifest proofes failed, they continued their ancient custome, held from before their Christianitie, vntill this great alteration: which trials they called Ordeal (Or signifying right, Deale, part) whereof they had these kindes: Ordeal by fire, which was for the better sort, and by water for the inferiour: That of Fire, was to goe blindfold ouer certaine ploughshares, made red hote, and layde an vneuen distance one from another. That of Water was was either of hot or cold: in the one to put their armes to the elbow, in the other to be cast headlong. According to their escapes or hurts, they were adiudged: such as were cast into the riuers, if they sancke were held guiltlesse, if not, culpable, as eiected by that Element. These trials they called the iudgements of God, and they were performed with solempne Oraisons. In some cases, the accused was admitted to cleare himselfe by receiuing the Eucharist, or by his owne oath, or the oathes of two or three; but this was for speciall persons, & such whose liuings were of a rate allowable thereunto, the visuall opinion perswading them, that men of abilitie held a more regard of honestie.

With these they had the triall of Campe-fight, or single combat (which likewise the Lumbards, originally of the same German nation, brought into Italy) permitted by the law in cases, either of safetie and fame, or of possessions. All which trials shew them to bee ignorant in any other forme of law, or to neglect it; Nor would they be induced to forgo these customes, and determine their affaires by Imperiall or Pontificall Constitutions, no more then would the Lumbards forsake their duellary lawes in Italy, which their Princes, against some of their wils, were constrained to ratifie, as Luytprandus their King, thus ingenuously "confesses. Wee are uncertaine of the iudgement of God, and we haue heard many by fight, "to haue lost their cause without iust cause; yet "is in respect of the custome of our Nation, wee "cannot auoid an impious law. But all these formes of iudgements and trials had their seasons; Those of Fire and Water, in short time after the Conquest grew disused, and in time viterly abrogated by the Pope, as deriued from Paganisme; that of combat continues longer-lived, but of no ordinary vse. At all actions now, both criminall and civil, began to bee wholly adiudged by the verdict of 12 men, according to the custome of Normandy, where the like forme is vsed, and called by the name of Enquest, with the same cautions for the Iurors, as it is heere continued to this day. Although some hold opinion that this forme of triall was of vse in this kingdom from all antiquity, and alledge an ordinance of King Ethelred (father to the Confessor) willing in their Gemore, or conuentions, monerthly held in euerie hundred, twelue graue men of free condition, should with the Grene, the chiefe Officer amongst them, sweare vpon the Euangellists, to iudge euery mans cause aright. But heere wee see twelue men were to bee assessors with the Grene to iudge, and no Iurors, according to this manner of triall now vsed, besides sides, had there bene any such forme, we should aswell haue heard thereof in their lawes and practise, as of those other kinds of Ordeal, onely and vsually mentioned.

But whatsoeuer innouations were in all other things, the gouernment for the peace and securitie of the kingdome (which most imported the king to looke vnto) seemes to bee continued as before, and for that businesse he found heere better lawes established by the wary care of our former kings, then any hee could bring. Amongst which especially was the Borough law, whereby euery free man of the Commons stood as surety for each others behaviour, in this sort.

The kingdome was diuided into Shiers, or Shares, euery Shire consisting of so many Hundreds, and euery Hundred of a number of Boroughs, Villages, or Tythings, containing tenne householders, whereof if any one should commit an ynlawfull act, the other nine were to attach and bring him to reason. If he fled, 31. daies were enioyned him to appeare: If in the meane time apprehended, he was made to restore the damage done; otherwise the Free-boroughead (to say the Tythingman) was to take with him two of the same Village, and out of three other Villages next adioyning as many, (that is, the Tythingman, and two other of the principall men) and before before the officers of that Hundred purge himselfe and the Village of the fact, restoring the damage done with the goodes of the malefactor, which if they suffized not to satisfie, the Free-boroh, or Tything, must make vp the rest, and besides take an oath to bee no way accessarie to the fact; and to produce the offender, if by any meanes they could recouer him, or know where hee were. Besides euerie Lord and Master, stood Boroh, for all his familie, whereof if any seruant were called in question, the Master was to see him answere it in the Hundred where hee was accused. If hee fled, the Master was to yeeld such goodes as hee had to the King. If himselfe were accused to bee aiding or priuie to his seruants flight, hee was to cleere himselfe by 5. men, otherwise to forfeit all his goodes to the King, and his man to be out-lawed.

These linckes, thus intermutually fastened, made so strong a chaine to hold the whole frame of the State together in peace and order, as all the most pollitique regiments vpon earth, all the interleagued societies of men, cannot shew vs a streighter forme of combination. This might make the Conquerour, comming vpon a people thus law-bound hand and foot, to establish him, so soone and easily as he did: This Boroh-law, beeing as a Cittadell built to gard the Common-wealth, comming to bee posselt by a conquering Master, was made to turne al this ordinance vpon the State, and batter her selfe with her owne weapon: and this law may be some cause, we finde no popular insurrection before the Conquest. For had not this people beene borne with these fetters, and an idle peace, but liued loose and in action it is like they would haue done as nobly, and giuen as many, and as deepe wounds ere they lost their Country, as euer the Brittaines did, either against the Romanes, or the Saxons, their predecessors, or themselues had done against the Danes; a people farre more powerful and numerous then these. The Conqueror, without this, had not made it the worke of one day, nor had Normandy euer beene able to haue yeilded those multitudes for supplies, that many battels must haue had.

But now, 1. the strict executing this lawe, 2. disweaponing the Commons, 3. preuenting their night-meetings with a heauie penaltie, that euerie man at the day closing, should couer his fire, and depart to his rest, 4. erecting diuers fortresses in fit parts of the kingdom, 5. and collating all offices, both of commaund, and iudicature, on such as were his; made his domination such as hee would haue it.

And where before the Bishoppe and the Alderman were the absolute iudges to determine mine all businesse in euerie Shier, and the Bishoppe in many cases shared in the benefite of the mulcts with the King, now hee confined the Clergie, within the Prouince of their owne Ecclesiasticall iurisdiction, to deale onely in businesse concerning rule of soules, according to the Cannons, and lawes Episcopall.

And whereas the causes of the kingdom were before determined in euerie Shire, and by a lawe of King Edward Senior, all matters in question should, vpon especial penalty, without further deferment, bee finally decided in their Gemote, or conventions, held Monethly in euerie Hundred: Now hee ordained that foure times in the yeere, for certaine daies, the same businesses should bee determined in such place as hee would appoint, where hee constituted iudges to attend for that purpose, and also others, from whom, as from the bosome of the Prince, all litigators should haue iustice; and from whom was no appeale. Others hee appointed for the punishment of malefactors, called Iusticiarij Pacis.

What alteration was then made in the tenure of mens possessions, or since introduced, wee may finde by taking note of their former vsances. Our Auncestors had onely two kinde of tenures, Boke-land, and Folkland, the one was a possession by writing, the other without. That by writing was a free-hold, and by charter, hereditary, with all immunities, and for the free and nobler sort. That without writing, was to hold at the will of the Lord, bound to rents and seruices, and was for the rurall people. The inheritances descended not alone, but after the German manner, equally deuided amongst all the children, which they called Landskiftan, to say Partland, a custome yet continued in some places of Kent, by the name of Gauelkin, or gif eal kin: And heereupon some write how the people of that Countrie, retained their ancient lawes and liberties by especiall graunt from the Conquerour: who after his battell at Hastings, coming to Douer, to make all sure on that side, was incompassed by the whole people of that Prouince, carrying boughes of trees in their hands, and marching round about him like a mouing wood. With which strange and suddaine shew being much moued, the Arch-Bishop Stigand, and the Abbot Egelsin, (who had raised this commotion by shewing the people in what daunger they were, viterly to lose their liberties, and indure the perpetuall misery of seruitude vnder the domination of strangers) present themselues, and declared how they were the vniuersall people of that Countrey, gathered together in that manner with with boughes in their hands, either as Oliue branches of intercession, for peace and libertie, or to intangle him in his passage, with resolution rather to leaue their liues, then that which was deerer, their freedome. Whereupon they say the Conqueror granted them the continuation of their former Customes and Liberties: whereof notwithstanding they now retaine no other then such as are common with the rest of the Kingdome.

For such as were Tenants at the will of their Lords (which now growne to a greater number, and more miserable then before) vpon their petition, and compassion of their oppression hee relieued: their case was this: All such as were discovered to haue had a hand in any rebellion, and were pardoned, onely to enioy the benefit of life, hauing all their liuelihood taken from them, became vassals vnto those Lords to whom the possessions were given of all such lands forfeited by attaindors. And if by their diligent seruice, they could attaine any portion of ground, they held it but onely so long as it pleased their Lords, without hauing any estate for themselues, or their children, and were oftentimes violently cast out vpon any small displeasure, contrary to all right. Whereupon it was ordayned that whatsoeuer they had obtained of their Lords by their obsequious seruice, or agreed for, by any lawfull pact, they should hold by an inuolable law during their owne liues.

The next great worke after the ordering his lawes, was the raising and disposing of his reuenues, taking a course to make, and know the vtmost of his estate, by a generall suruey of the kingdome, whereof he had a president by the Dome booke of Winchester, taken before by king Alfride. But as one day informes another, so these actions of profit grew more exact in their after practise: and a larger Commission is granted, a choice of skilfuller men employed, to take the particulars both of his owne possessions, and euery mans else in the kingdome, the nature and the qualitie of their lands, their estates, and abilities; besides the descriptions, bounds, and diuisions of Shires & Hundreds, and this was drawne into one booke, & brought into his treasure, then newly called the Exchequer (according to the soueraigne court of that name of Normandy) before termed here the Tale, and it was called the Dome booke (Liber iudiciarius) for all occasions concerning these particulars.

All the Forests and Chases of the kingdom he seized into his proper possession, and exempted them from being vnder any other law then his owne pleasure, to serue as Penetralia Regum, the withdrawing chambers of kings, to recreate them after their serious labours in the State,

State, where none other might presume or haue to doe, and where all punishments and pardons of delinquents were to bee disposed by himselfe, absolutely, and all former customes abrogated. And to make his command the more he increased the number of them in all parts of the Land, and on the South coast dispeopled the countrey for about thirty miles space, making of old inhabited possessions, a new Forest, inflicting most seuerer punishments for hunting his Deere, and thereby much aduances his reuenues. An act of the greatest concussion, and tyranny, hee committed in his raigne, and which purchased him much hatred: And the same course held almost euery king neere the Conquest, till this heauie grievance was allayed by the Charter of Forests, granted by Henry 3.

Besides these, he imposed no new taxations on the State, and vsed those hee found very moderately, as Danegelt, an imposition of two shillings vpon euery hide, or plough-land, (raised first by king Ethelred, to bribe the Danes, after to warre vpon them) he would not haue it made an Annuall payment, but onely taken vpon vrgent occasion, and it was seldome gathered in his time, or his successors (saith Gervasius) yet wee finde in our Annals, a tax of 6. shill. vpon euery hide-land, leauied presently after the generall suruey of the kingdome.

The new Forest in Hampshire.

Eſquage (whether it were an imposition formerly laide, though now newly named, I doe not finde) was a ſumme of money, taken of euery Knights fee: In after-times, eſpecially raiſed for the ſervice of Scotland; and this alſo, ſaith Gervasius, was ſeldome leauied, but on great occaſion, for ſtipends and donatiues to ſouldiers; yet was it at firſt a due, reſerued out of ſuch lands as were giuen by the Prince for ſervice of warre, according to the cuſtome of other Nations. As in the Romans time, wee finde lands were giuen in reward of ſervice to the men of warre, for tearme of their Hues; as they are at this day in Turkey: After they became Patrimoniall, and Hereditarie to their children. Seuerus the Emperour was the firſt who permitted the children of men of war, to inioy their Fiefs, provided that they followed Armes. Constantine to reward his principall Captaines, granted them a perpetuities in the lands assigned them. The eſtates which were but for life, were made perpetuall in France, vnder the laſt Kings of the race of Charlemaine. Thoſe Lords who had the great Fiefs of the King, ſub-deuided them to other perſons, of whom they were to haue ſervice.

Mulſtuary profits, beſides, ſuch as might ariſe by the breach of his Foreſt-lawes, hee had fewe or none newe, vnleſſe that of Murther, which aroſe vpon this occaſion. In the beginning ning of his raigne, the rancor of the Engliſh towards the new come Normans, was ſuch, as finding them ſingle in woods, or remote places, they ſecretly murthered them; and the deed doers, for any the ſeuereſt courſes taken, could neuer bee diſcouered: whereupon it was ordained, that the Hundred, wherein a Norman was found ſlaine, and the Murtherer not taken, ſhould be condemned to pay to the King, ſome 36. pounds, ſome 28. pounds, according to the quantitie of the Hundred, that the puniſhment beeing generally inflicted, might particularly deterre them, and haſten the diſcovery of the malefactor, by whom ſo many muſt otherwiſe be intereſſed.

For his prouiſionary reuenues, hee continued the former cuſtom held by his predeceſſors, which was in this manner. The Kings Tenants, who held their lands of the Crowne, paid no money at all, but only Victuals, Wheat, Bieſes, Muttons, Hay, Oates, &c. and a iuſt note of the quality and quantitie of euery mans ratement was taken throughout all the Shires of the kingdome, and leauied euery certaine, for the maintenance of the Kings houſe. Other ordinarie in-come of ready moneys was there none, but what was raiſed by mulcts, and out of Cities and Caſtles where Agriculture was not uſed.

What the Church yeelded him, was by extent

tent of a power that neuer reached so farre before, and the first hand he laid vpon that side, which weighed heavily, was his seizing vpon the Plate, Jewels, and Treasure, within all the Monasteries of England, pretending the rebels, and their assistants, conueyed their riches into these religious houses (as into places priuiledged, and free from seizure) to defraud him thereof.

Besides this, hee made all Bishopricks, and Abbeyes, that held Barronies (before that time free from all secular seruices) contributarie to his warres, and his other occasions. And this may bee the cause why they, who then onely held the Pen (the Scepter that rules ouer the memorie of Kings) haue laide such an eternall imposition vpon his name, of rigour, oppression, and euen barbarous immanity, as they haue done. When the nature and necessary disposition of his affaires (beeing as hee was) may aduocate, and in many things much excuse his courses. But this name of Conquest, which euer imports violence and misery, is of so harsh a sound, and so odious in nature, as a people subdued cannot giue a Conquerour his due, how euer worthy, and especially to a stranger, whom onely time must naturalize and incorporate by degrees into their liking and opinion: And yet therein this King was greatly aduantaged, by reason of his twenty yeeres yeeres gouernement, which had much impaired the memory of former customes in the yonger sort, and well inured the elder to the present vsances and forme of State, whereby the rule was made more easie to his sonnes: who though they were farre inferior to him in worth, were somewhat better beloued then hee; and the rather for that their occasions made them somewhat to vnrest the Soueraigntie from that height whereunto hee had strayned it.

How hee was vnderfet with able ministers for the managing of these great affaires of his, though time hath shut vs out from the knowledge of some of them (it being in the fortune of kings, to haue their ministers like riuers in the Ocean, buried in their glory) yet no doubt, being of a strong constitution of iudgement he could not but bee strongly furnished in that kind, for weake kings haue weake sides, and the most renowned Princes are euer best stored with able ministers. The principall of highest imployment, were Odon, Bishoppe of Bayeux, and Earle of Kent, Lanfranke, Archbishop of Canterbury, and William Fitz-Auber, Earle of Hereford: Odon supplied the place of Viceroy in the kings absence, and had the management of the Treasury. A man of a wide and agile spirit, let out into as spacious a conceit of greatnesse, as the height of his place could shew him: And is ruinated by the infinite accumulation of money (which his avarice, and length of office had made) either to buy the Popedom, or purchase the people of England, vpon the death of his brother: who vnderstanding a purpose hee had of going to Rome, and seeing a mightie confluence of followers, gathering vnto him, made a close prison stay his iourney: excusing it to the Church, that hee imprisoned not a Bishop of Bayeux, but an Earle of Kent, and Officer and accomptant vnto him. Yet vpon his death-bed (shortly following) after many obsecrations, that hee would, in respect of bloud and nature, bee a kind meane for the future peace of his sonnes, he released him. But the Bishop failed his request therein, and became the onely kindle-fire to set them all into more furious combustion. The motiue of his discontent (the engine wherewithall Ambition euermore turnes about his intentions) was the enuy he bare to Lanfranc, whose counsell, in his greatest affayres, the king especially vsed: and to oppose and ouer-bear him, tooke hee all the contrary courses, and part with Robert, his nephew, whom (after many fortunes) hee attended to the holy warre, and died in the siege of Antioche.

Lanfranc was a man of as vniuersall goodnesse as learning, borne in Lumbardie, and came came happely a stranger, in these strange times to do good to England; vpon whose obseruance, though the King might (in regard hee raised him) lay some tye, yet his affections could not but take part with his pietie and place: in so much as he feared not to oppose against Odon, the Kings brother, seeking to gripe from the State of his Church: And in all hee could, stood so betweene the kingdome and the kings rigor, as stayed many precipitious violencies; that he (whose power lay as wide as his will) might else haue fallen into. For the Conqueror, howsoeuer austere to others, was to him alwayes milde and yeelding, as if subdued with his grauitie and vertue.

He reformed the irregularitie and rudenesse of the Clergie, introducing a more Southerne formalitie and respect, according to his breedings and the custome of his Countrey: concurring herein likewise to bee an actor of alteration (though in the best kinde) with this change of State. And to giue entertainment to deuotion, hee did all he could to furnish his Church with the most exquisite ornaments might bee procured: added a more State and conueniency to the structure of religious houses, and beganne the founding of Hospitals. Having long strugled, with indefatigable labour, to hold things in an even course, during the whole raigne of this busie new state-building King. And after his death, seeing his successor in the Crowne (established especially by his meanes) to faile his expectation, out of the experience of worldly causes, diuining of future mischiefs by present courses grew much to lament with his friends the tediousness of life, which shortly after he mildly left, which such a sickness, as neither hindered his speech nor memory: a thing he would often desire of God.

William Fitz-Auber, (as is deliuered) was a principall counsellour and instrument in this action for England; wherein hee furnished 40. ships at his owne charge. A man of great meanes, yet of a heart greater, and a hand larger then any meanes would well suffice. His profuse liberalities to men of armes, gaue often sharpe offence to the King, who could not indure any such improuident expences. Amongst the lawes hee made (which shewes the power these Earles then had in their Provinces) hee ordained that in the Countie of Hereford no man of armes (or souldier) should be fined for any offence whatsoeuer, aboue 7. shillings when in other Counties, vpon the least occasion of disobeying their Lords will, they were forced to pay. 20. or 25. shil. But his estate seeming to beare no proportion with his minde, and enough it was not to bee an eminent Earle, an especiall Counsellour, in all the affaires of England and Normandy, a chiefe fauorite to so great a Monarch, but that larger hopes drew him away; designing to marrie Richeld, Countesse dowager of Flanders, and to haue the gouernment of that Country, during the nonage of Arnulph her sonne; of whom, with the king of France, hee had the tutelarie charge, committed by Baldouin the sixth, father to Arnulph; whose estate Robert le Frison his Vncle, called by the people to the gouernment, vpon the exactions inflicted on them by Richeld, had vsurped. And against him Fitz Auber opposing, was with Arnulph, surprized and slaine.

And this was in the fate of the Conquerour, to see most of all these great men, who had bene the especiall actors in all his fortunes, spent and extinct before him: As Beaumont, Monfort, Harcourte, Hugh de Gourney, Vicount Neele, Hugh de Mortimer, Conte de Vennes, &c. And now himselfe, after his being brought sicke to Roman, and there disposing his estate, ended also his act, in the 74. yeere of his age, and the 21. of his raigne.

Three daies the Corps of this great Monarch is said to haue lain neglected, while his seruants attended to imbesill his mouables: in the end, his yongest sonne Henrie, had it conueyed to the Abbey of Cane; where first, at the entrie into the Towne, they who carried the

the Corps, left it alone, and ranne all to quench the fire: Afterward brought to be intombed, a Gentleman stands forth, and in sterne manner, forbids the interment in that place, claiming the ground to bee his inheritance, descended from his auncestors, taken from him at the building of that Abbey, and appeales to Row, their first founder, for Iustice: whereupon they were faine to compound with him for an Annuall rent. Such adoe had the body of him after death (who had made so much in his life) to bee brought to the earth; and of all hee attained, had not now a roome to containe him, without beeing purchased at the hand of another, men esteeming a living Dog more then a dead Lion.

Hee had a faire issue by Maud his wife, foure sonnes, and five daughters. To Robert his eldest, hee left the Dutchy of Normandy: to William the third sonne, the kingdome of England: to Henry the yongest his treasure, with an annuall pension to bee paid him by his brothers. Richard who was his second sonne, and his darling, a Prince of great hope, died in his youth, of a surfeit taken in the new Forest, and began the fatalnesse that followed in that place, by the death of William the second, there slaine with an arrow, and of Richard the sonne of Robert Duke of Normandy, who brake his necke.

His

His eldest daughter Cicilie, became a Nunne: Constance married to the Earle of Britaigne: Adela to Stephen Earle of Blois, who likewise rendred her selfe a Nunne in her age; such was then their deuotion, and so much were these solitary retires, affected by the greatest Ladies of those times: the other two died before marriage.

Now what hee was in the circle of himselfe in his owne continent, we find him of an euen stature, comely personage, of good presence, riding, sitting, or standing, till his corpulency increasing with age, made him somewhat vnwildy, of so strong a constitution, as he was neuer sickly till a fewe moneths before his death. His strength such, as few men could draw his bow, and being about 50. of his age, when he subdued this kingdome, it seemes by his continual actions, hee felt not the weight of yeeres vpon him, till his last yeere.

What was the composition of his minde, wee see it the fairest drawne in his actions, and how his abilities of Nature, were answerable to his vndertakings of Fortune, as pre-ordain'd for the great worke he effected. And though he might haue some aduantage of the time, wherein we often see men preuaile more by the imbecilitie of others, then their owne worth; yet let that season of the world be well examined, and a iust measure taken of his actiue vertues, they will appeare of an exceeding proportion: Nor wanted he those incounters and concurrencies of sufficient able Princes, to put him to the trial therof: hauing on one side the French to grapple withall; on the other the Dane, farre mightier in people, and shipping then himselfe, strongly sided in this kingdome, as eager to recouer their former footing here, as euer, and as well or better prepared.

For his deuotion and mercy, the brightest starres in the Spheare of Maiestie, they appeare aboue all his other vertues, and the due obseruation of the first, the Clergie (that loued him not) confesse: the other was scene, in the often pardoning, and receiuing into grace, those who had forfeited their loyalties, and dangerously rebelled against him; as if hee held submission satisfactorie, for the greatest offence, & sought not to defeat men, but their enterprises: For we finde but one Nobleman executed in all his raigne, and that was the Earle Waltheof, who had twise falsified his faith before: And those hee held prisoners in Normandie, as the Earles Morchar and Siward, with Wolfnoth, the brother of Harald, & others (vpon compassion of their indurance) he released a little before his death.

Besides, hee was as farre from suspition, as cowardize, and of that confidence (an especiall note of his magnanimity) as he gaue Edgar his competitor in the Crowne, the liberty of his Court:

Court: And (vpon his suite) sent him well furnished to the holy warre, where hee nobly behaued himselfe, and attained to great estimation, with the Emperours of Greece and Almaine, which might haue beene held dangerous, in respect of his alliances that way, being as some write, grand-child to the Emperour Henry 3. But these may bee as well vertues of the Time, as of Men, and so the age must haue part of this commendation.

Magnificent he was in his Festiuals, which with great solemnity and ceremonie (the formall entertainers of reuerence and respect) he duly obserued. Keeping his Christmas at Glocester, his Easter at Winchester, and Pentecost at Westminster: whither he summoned his Nobility; that Embassadors and Strangers might see his State, and largenesse. Nor euer was he more mild and indulgent, then at such times. And these ceremonies his next Successor obserued; but the second omitted.

William, second sonne to William I. not attending his fathers funerals, hastes into England to recouer
his Crowne; where,
by the especial mediation of the Arch-bishoppe Lanfranc his owne large bounty and wide promises, he obtained it, according to his fathers will, to whom, by his obsequious-nesse he had much indeered himselfe, especially after the abdication of his elder brother Robert.
He was a Prince more gallant then good, and hauling beene bred with the sword, alwaies in action

action, and on the better side of fortune, of a nature rough, and haucie, whereunto his youth, & soueraignty added a greater widenes. Comming to succeed in a gouernment, fore-ruled by mature and gray counsell, he was so ouerwhelmed with his fathers worth and greatnesse, as made him appeare of a lesser Orbe then otherwise hee would; and then the shortnesse of his raigne, beeing but of 13. yeeres, allowed him not time to recouer that opinion, which the errors of his first gouernment had lost, or his necessities caused him to commit. For the succession in right of Primogeniture, beeing none of his, and the elder brother liuing, howsoeuer his fathers will was, hee must now bee put, and held in possession of the Crowne, by the will of the kingdome, which to purchase, must bee by large conditions of relieuements in generall, and profuse gifts in particular. Wherein hee had the more to doe, beeing to deale with a State, consisting of a twofold body, and different temperaments, where any inflammation of discontent, was the more apt to take, hauing a head whereto it might readily gather. Which made, that vnlesse hee would lay more to their hopes then another, hee could not hope to haue them firmly his. And therefore seeing the best way to winne the Normans was by money, and the English with liberties, he spared not at first, to bestow on the one,

one, and to promise the other, more then fitted his estate and dignitie; which, when afterward failing both in supplies (for great gifts must alwaies giue,) and also in performances, got him farre more hatred then otherwise hee could euer haue had, beeing forced to all the dishonourable shifts for raising moneys that could be deuised, and euen to resume his owne former grants.

And to beginne at first to take the course to bee euer needy; presently after his Coronation hee goes to Winchester, where his fathers treasure lay, and empties out all that which with great prouidence was there amassed, whereby, though hee wonne the loue of many, he lost more, being not able to content all. And now although his brother Robert had not (this great ingine of men) money, hee had to giue hopes: and there were heere of the Normans, as Odon his vncle, Roger de Mongomerie Earle of Shrewesburie, with others, who were mainly for him, and worke hee doth all hee can, to batter his brothers fortunes, vpon their first foundation. And for this purpose, borrowes great summes of his yonger brother Henrie, (to whom the father and mother had left much treasure) and for the same, ingages the Countie of Constantine, and leuies an Army for England. But William newly inuested in the Crowne, though well prepared for all assaults, assaults, had rather purchase a present peace by mediation of the Nobles on both sides, til time had better settled him in his gouernment then to raise spirits that could not easily bee alliaied. And an agreement betweene them is wrought, that William should hold the Crowne of England during his life, paying to Robert 3. thousand Markes Per annum.

Robert hauing closed this businesse, resumes by force the Countrie of Constantine out of his brother Henries hands, without discharge of those summes, for which hee had ingaged it. VVherupon king William vpbraids Henrie with the great gaine hee had made by his Vsurie in lending money to depriue him of his Crowne. And so Henrie got the hatred of both his brothers, and hauing no place safe from their danger where to liue, surprized the castel of Mount Saint Michael, fortifies him therein, gets aide of Hugh Earle of Britaigne, and for his money was serued with Bretons, who committed great spoiles, in the Countries of Constantine and Besfin.

Odon, Byshoppe of Bayeux, returning into England after his imprisonment in Normandy, and restored to his Earldome of Kent, finding himselfe so farre vnder what he had beene, and Lanfranc his concurrent, now the onely man in counsell with the King, complots with as many Norman Lords as hee found, or made to affect change and a new maister, and sets them on worke in diuers parts of the Realme, to distract the Kings forces: as first, Geoffery Byshop of Conslans, with his Nephew Robert de Mowbray, Earle of Northumberland, fortifye themselves in Brislow, and take in all the Countrey about: Roger de Bigod, made himselfe strong in Northfolke: Hugh de Grandmenill about Leicester; Roger de Mongomerie Earle of Shrewsburie, with a power of Welsh-men, and other thereabout, sets out accompanied with William Byshop of Durham: Bernard de New march, Roger Lacie, and Raulfe Mortimer, all Normans, and assaile the Cittie of Worcester, making themselves strong in those parts. Odon himselfe fortifies the Castle of Rocheſter, makes good all the Coast of Kent, sollicites Robert to vse what speed he cotld to come with all his power out of Normandie: which had hee doone in time, and not giuen his Brother so large opportunity of preuention, hee had carried the kingdom; but his delay yeeldes the King time to confirme his Friends, vnderworke his enemies, and make him strong with the English, which hee did by graunting taxation of tribute, with other releuements of their doleances, and restoring them to their former freedome of hunting in all his Woodes and Forrests, a thing they much esteemed; whereby hee made them so strongly his, as hee soone brake the necke

of all the Norman conspiracies (they being eager to reuenge them of that nation) and heere they learned first to beat their conquerors, hauing the faire aduantage of their action, which cut the throats of many of them.

Mongomerie, being won from his complices and the seuerall Conspirators in other parts repress't, the King comes with an Army into Kent where the heade of the faction lay, and first, won the Castle of Tunbridge, and that of Pemsey, which Odon was forced to yeelde, and promise to cause those which defended that of Rochester, which were Ensfacc, Earle of Bologne, and the Earle of Mortaigne, to render likewise the same. But being brought thether to effect the businesse, they within, receiuing him, detained him, as he pretended, prisoner, and held out stoutly against the King, vpon a false intelligence giuen of the arriual of Duke Robert at Southampton, but in the end, they were forced to quit the place, and retire into France, & Odon to abiure England.

And to keepe off the like danger from hence, he transports his forces into Normandy, there to wast and weaken his brother at home. So, as might holde him from any future attempts, abroad for euer after. Where first he obtaines Saint Valery, and afterward Albemarle, with the whole Country of Eu, Fescampe, the Abathie of Monte Saint Michell, Cherburge, and other places.

places. Robert seekes ayde of Phillip King of France, who comes downe with an Army into Normandie; but ouercome with the power of mony wherewith King William assayed him did little good, and so retyred.

Whereupon, Duke Robert in the end, was driuen to a dishonourable peace, concluded at Caen with these Articles. 1. that King William should hold the Countie of Eu, Fescampe, and all other places, which hee hadde bought, and were deliuered vnto him, by William Earle of Eu, and Stephen Earle of Aimall, Sisters sonne to William the first. 2. He should aid the duke to recouer all other peeces which belonged to his Father, and were vsurped from the Dutchy. 3. That such Normans, as hadde lost their Estates in England, by taking part vvith the Duke, should be restored thercunto. 4. That the suruiuer of either of them, should succcede in the Dominions both of England and Normandie.

After this peace made, by the mediation of the King of France, whilst William had a strong Army in the fiede, Duke Robert requested his ayd against their brother Henry, who still kept him in the Fort of Mount Saint Michel, vppon his gard, holding it best for his safety: for being a Prince that could not subsist of himselfe, as an earthen vessel set among iron pots, he was euery way in daunger to be crush't, and seeing ted to prison, and before he could be released, forced to renounce the Country of Costentine, and sweare neuer to claime any thing in Normandy.

Henrie complains of this grosse iniustice, to Phillip king of France, who gaue him a faire entertainment in his Court. Where he remayned not long, but that a Knight of Normandie, named Hachard, vndertaking to put him into a Fort (maugre his Brother Robert) within the Dutchy, conueyed him disguised out of the Court, and wrought so, as the Castle of Damfronc was deliuered vnto him, whereby shortly after, he got al the Country of Passays, about it, and a good part of Costentine, by the secret ayde of King William, Richard de Riuires, and Roger de Manneuille.

Duke Robert leauies forces, and eagerly wrought to recouer Damfronc, but finding how Henry was vnderfet, inueighs against the perfidie of his brother of England: insomuch as the flame of rancor burst out againe more then euer. And ouer-passes king William with a great Army, but rather to terrifie, then do any great matter, as a Prince that did more contend then warre, and would be great with the sword, yet seldome desired to vse it, if he could get to his endes by any other meanes, seeking rather to buy his peace then win it.

Many skirmishes interpassed, with surprise-

ments of Castles, but in the ende a Treatie of peace was propounded: wherein to make his conditions, what he would, K. William seemes hard to be wrought, and makes the more shew of force, sending ouer into England, for an army of thirty thousand mē, which being brought to the shore, ready to bee shipped, an offer was made to be proclaimed by his Lieutenant, that giuing ten shillings a man, whosoever would might depart home to his dwelling. Whereby was raysed so much, as discharged his expence, and serued to Fee the King of Fraunce vnder-hand, for his forbearing ayde vnto Duke Robert, who seeing himself left by the French, must needs make his peace as the other would haue it.

Now for his affayres at home, the vncertain warres with Wales and Scotland, gaue him more businesse then Honour. Beeing driuen in the one to encounter with Mountaines instead of men, vnto the great losse and disaduantage of his people, and in the other with as manie necessities. Wales he sought to subdu, Scotland so to restraine as it might not hurt him. For the last, after much broyle, both Kinges, seeming more willing to haue peace then to seeke it, are brought to an enter-view. Malcolin vpon publique Faith, and safe conduct came to Glocester, where, vpon the haughtinesse of K. William, looking to bee satisfied in all his demands, maunds, and the vnyeeldingnesse of King Malcolin, standing vpon his regalitie within his owne, though content to be ordered for the confines, according to the iudgement of the Primate of both kingdomes; nothing was effected but a greater disdain, and rankor in Malcolin, seeing himselfe dispised, and scarce looked on, by the King of England. So that vpon his returne, armed with rage, he raises an Army, enters Northumberland, which foure times before he had depopulated, and nowe the fith, seeking vtterly to destroy it, and to haue gone farther, was, with his eldest sonne Edward slaine, rather by the fraud then powre of Robert Mowbray Earle of that County: The griefe of whose deaths gaue Marguerot, that blessed Queene, hers. After whom the State elected Dufnald, brother to Malcolin, and chased out all the English, which attended the Queene, and were harboured, or preferred by Malcolin. King William to set the line right, and to haue a King there which should be beholding to his power, aides Edgar, the second sonne to Malcolin (who had serued him in his warres) to obtaine the Crowne due vnto him in right of succession: by whose meanes Dufnald was expeld, and the State receiued Edgar, but killed all the aide he brought with him out of England, and capitulated that he should neuer more entertaine English or Norman in his his seruice.

This businesse settled, Wales struggling for libertie and reuenge, gaue newe occasion of worke, whether hee went in person, with purpose to depopulate the countrey: but they retyring into the Mountaines and the Isle of Anglesey, auoided the present fury. But afterward Hugh Earle of Shrewsbury, and Hugh Earle of Chester, surprizing the Isle, their cheefest retreat, committed there barbarous examples of cruelty, by excecations, & miserable dismembering the people, which immanity was there suddenly auenged on the Earle of Shrewsbury with a double death, first shot into the eye, and then tumbling ouerboord into the Sea, to the sport and scorn of his enimie the King of Norway, who eyther by chaunce, or of purpose, comming vpon that coast from taking in the Orchades, encountred with him, and that force he had at sea.

These were the remote businesses, when a conspiracie brake out within the bodye of the Kingdome, complotted by Robert Mowbray Earle of Northumberland, William d'On, and many other, which gaue the King more trouble then danger: for by the speedie and mayne prosecution of the businesse, wherein hee vsed the best strength of England, it was soone ended, with the confusion of the vndertakers. But it wrought an ill effect in his nature, by hardening

ning the same to an extreame rigour: for after the feare was past, his wrath and crueltie were not, but (which is hiddeous in a Prince) they grew to be numbred amongst incurcable diseases.

Manie accusations of great men, followed vpon this act, and were easily belieued, howsoeuer proued. William de Aluerie, a man of goodly personage, his Aunts sonne, and his Sewer, was at a counsell holden at Salisbury, condemned to be hanged: when both in his confession to Osmond the Byshop there, and to all the people as he passed to execution, he left a clear opinion of his innocency, and the wrong hee had by the King.

But now whiles these fractures here at home, the vnreparable breaches abroad were such, as could giue the King no longer assurednesse of quiet then the attempters would: and that all the Christian world was out, cyther at discord amongst themselves, or in faction, by the Schisme of the Church: Pope Vrbane, assembling a generall Counsell at Cleirmont in Auuergne, to compose the affaires of Christendome, exhorted all the Princes thereof, to ioyne themselves in action, for the recovery of the holy Land, out of the hands of Infidels. Which motion by the zealous negotiation of Peter the Hermit, of Amiens, tooke so generally (meeting with the disposition of an actiue, and Religious worlde) as turn'd all that flame, which had else consumed each other at home, vpon vnkowne Nations, that vndid them abroad.

Such, and so great grewe the heate of this action, made by the perswasion of the Iustice thereof, with the State and Glorie it woulde bring on earth, and the assurednesse of heauen to all the pious vnder-takers, that none were esteemed to contain any thing of worth which would stay behind. Each giues hand to other to lead them along, and example addes number. The forwardnesse of so many great Princes, passing away their whole estates, and leauing all what the deerenesse of their Countrey contraind, drew to this war three hundred thousand men, all which, though in Armes, passed from diuers Countries and Portes, with that quietnesse, as they seemed rather Pilgrims then Souldiers.

Godefroy of Bouillon, Nephew and heyre to the Duke of Lorrayne, a generous Prince, bred in the Vvarres of the Emperour Henry 4. was the first that offered vppe himselfe to this Famous voyage, and with him his two Brothers, Eustace, and Baudouin, by whose examples, were drawne Hugh le Grand, Count de Vermandois, Brother to Phillip King of France. Robert Duke of Normandy, Robert de Frison, Earle of Flanders, Stephen Earle of Blois and Chartres,

Aimar Byshop of Fuy. William Bishophe of Orange, Raimond Earle of Tholouse: Baudouin Earle of Hainaut, Baudouin Earle of Rehel, and Garnier Earle of Gretz, Harpin Earle of Bourges, Ysoard Earle of Die, Rambaud Earle of Orange, Guillaum Conte de Forests, Stephen Conte de Aumaul, Hugh Earle of Saint Pol, Rotron Earle of Perche, and diuers others. These were for Fraunce, Germany, and the Countreyes adioyning. Italie had Bohemond Duke of Apulia; and England, Beauchampe, with others, whose Names are lost: Spaine onely hadde none, being afflicted at that time with the Sarazens.

Most of all these Princes and great personages to furnish them-selues for this expedition, solde, or ingaged their possessions. Godefroy sold the Dutchie of Bologne to Aubert Bishophe of Liege, and Metz to the Cittizens: besides hee solde the Castle of Sarteney, and Mons to Richard Byshoppe of Verdun, and vnto the same Byshop, Baudouin, his Brother, sold the Earledome of Verdun. Eustace likewise sold all his liuelyhood to the Church: Herpin Earle of Bourges, his Earledome to Phillip King of Fraunce: and Robert morgaged his Dutchy of Normandie, the Earledome of Maine, and all hee had, to his Brother King William of England.

Whereby the Pope not onely weakened the the Empire, with whome the Church had, to the great affliction of Christendome, helde a long, and a bloody businesse, about the inuestitures of Byshoppes; tooke away and infeeble his Partizans, abated, as if by Ostroisme, the power of any Prince that might oppose him, but also aduanced the State Ecclesiasticall, by purchasing these great Temporalities, (more honourable for the sellers then the buyers) vnto a greater meanes then euer. For, by aduising the vndertakers, seing their action was for CHRIST and his Church, rather to make ouer their Estates vnto the Cleargy, of whome they might againe redeeme the same, and be sure to haue the fayrest dealing; then vnto Lay-men, he effected this work. Whereby, the third part of the best Fiefs in Fraunce, came to be posselt by the Cleargy; and afterward vpon the same occasion, manie thinges more solde vnto them in England, especially when Richard the first vndertooke the Voyage, who passed ouer diuers Mannors to Hugh Byshop of Durham, and also for his mony created him Earle of Durham.

This humour was kept vp, and in motion about 200. yeares, notwithstanding all the discouragements, by the difficulties in passing, the disasters there, through contagion arising from a disagreeing clime: and the multitudes of indigent people, cast oftentimes into misrable wants. It consumed infinit treasure, and most of the brauest men of al our West world, and especially France. For Germanie and Italie, those who were the Popes friends, and would haue gone, were stayed at home by dispensation to make good his partie against the Emperour, who notwithstanding still strugled with him, but in the end, by this meanes the Pope preuayled. But these were not all the effectes this voyage wrought: the Christians, who went out to seeke an enemy in Asia, brought one thence, to the danger of all Christendom, and the losse of the fairest part thereof. For this long keeping it in a Warre, that had manie intermissions with fits of heates and coldnesses, (as made by a league, consisting of seuerall nations, emulous, and vnconcurrent in their courses) taught such, as were of an entyre bodie, their weaknesses, and the way to conquer them. This was the great effect this Voyage wrought.

And by this meanes king William heer was now rid of an elder Brother, and a Competitor had the possession of Normandie during his raigne, and a more absolutenesse and irregularity in England. Where nowe, in making vp this great summe to pay Robert, he vsed all the extreame meanes could be deuised, as hee had done in all like businesses before. Whereby he incurred the hatred of his people in generall, nerall, and especially of the Cleargie, being the first King which shewed his successors an euill precedent of keeping their linings vacant, and receiuing the profites of them himselfe, as he did that of Canterbury, foure yeares after the death of Lanfranc, and had holden it longer, but that being dangerously sicke at Gloucester, the sixth yeare of his raigne, his Cleargie, in the weaknesse of his bodie, tooke to worke vpon his minde, so as he vowed, vpon his recovery to see it furnished, which hee did, but with so great adoo, as shewed that hauing escaped the danger, he would willingly haue deceyued the Saint. And Anselme an Italian borne, though bred in Normandy, is the end preferred to that Sea. But, what with his owne stiffenesse, and the Kings standing on his regalitie, hee neuer enjoyed it quietly vnder him. For, betweene them two, beganne the first contestation about the inuestitures of Bishops, & other priuiledges of the Church, which gaue much to doo, to many of his successors. Anselme not yeelding to the Kings will, forsook the land, whereupon his Bishoppricke was re-assumed, and the King held in his hands at one time, besides that of Canterbury, the Bishoppricks of Winchester, Sarum, and eleauen Abbeyes whereof he tooke all the profits.

He vsually solde all spiritual preferments to those would giue molt, and tooke fines of Priests

Priests for fornication, hee vexed Robert Blues Byshop of Lincolne, in suite, till he paid him 5000. pounds.

And now the Clergie, vpon this taxe, complaining their wants, were answered, that they had Shrines of gold in their Churches, and for so holy a worke, as this warre against Infidels, they should not spare them. He also tooke mony of Iewes, to cause such of them as were conuerted, to renounce Christianity, as making more benefite by their vnbeleefe, then their conuersion. Wherein he discovered the worst peece of his Nature, irreligion.

Besides his great taxations laide on the Layty, hee set Informers vpon them, and for small transgressions made great penalties. These were his courses for raising moneyes, wherein he sayled not of fit ministers to execute his wil among whom was cheefe, Ranulph Byshop of Durham, whom he had corrupted with other Byshoppes to counterpoize the Cleargy, awe the Layty, and countenance his proceedings. All which meanes, he exhausted, cyther in his buildings, which were the New Castle vpon Tine, the City of Ca-leil, Westminster Hal, and the Walles of the Tower of London, or else in his prodigall giifts to strangers. Twice he appeased the king of France with money, and his profusion was such, as put him euermore into extreame wants.

This one Act, which shewes both his violence and magnanimitie, remaines: As he was one day hunting, a Messenger comes in all hast out of Normandie, and tels him how the Cittie of Mans was surprised, by Hely Conte de la Fle-sche (who by his Wife pretended right thereunto, and was ayded by Fouques d' Angiers, the ancient enemy of the Dukes of Normandy) and that the Castle which helde out valiantly for him, was without present succour to be rendered. He sends backe the Messengers instantlie, wils him to make all the speede he could to signifie to his people in the Castle, that he would be there within eight daies, if Fortune hindred him not. And suddenly he askes of his people about him, which way Mans lay, and a Norman being by, shewed him: Presently he turnes his Horse towards that Coast, and in great hast rides on: when some aduised him to stay for fit prouisions, and people for his iourney, hee said; They who loue me will follow me. And comming to imbarke at Dartmouth, the Maister told him the weather was rough, and there was no passing without eminent danger; Tush said he, set forward. I neuer yet heard of King that was drowned.

By breake of day he arriued at Harfleu, sends for his Captaines, and men of warre to attend him all at Mans, whither hee came at the day appointed. Con.e de la Fl. sche, hauing more right then power, after many skirmishes, was taken by a stratagem, and brought prisoner to ROHEN; where more enraged, then dismaid with his fortune, he let fall these words; that had he not bin taken with a wile, he would haue left the King but little Land on that side the sea, & were hee againe at libertie, they should not so easily take him. Which being reported; the King sent for him, set him at liberty, gaue him a faire Horffe, bad him goe his way, and doo his worst. Which acte ouercame him more then his taking, and a quiet end was made betweene them.

The King returnes into England with great iollity, as euer bringing home better fortune out of Normandy, then from any his Northerne expeditions: Feastes his Nobilitie with all Magnificence, in his new hall, lately finished at Westminster, wherewith he found much fault for being built too little; saying, it was fitter for a chamber, then a Hall for a King of England, and takes a plotte for one farre more spacious to be added vnto it. And in this gaytie of State, when hee had got aboute all his businesses, betakes him wholly to the pleasure of peace, and being Hunting with his Brother Henry in the new Forrest, Walter Terell, a Norman, and his kinsman, shooting at a Deere, (whether mistaking his marke, or not, is vncertaine) strake him to the heart. And so fel

this fierce King, in the 43. yeare of his age. A Prince, who for the first two years of his raign, whilst, held in, by the graue counsell of Lanfranc, and his owne feares, bare himselfe most woorthily, and had beene absolute for State, had he not after sought to be absolut in power, which meeting with an exorbitant will, makes both Prince and people miserable.

Henry the First.

HENRY the yongest sonne of William the first, beeing at hand, & borne in England, (which made much for him) was elected & crowned within foure dayes after his Brothers death; it being giuen out, that Robert, who shold haue succeeded William, was chosen king of Ierusalem, and not like to giue ouer that kingdom for this. Wherefore to settle Henry in the possession of the Crowne, all expedition possible was vfed, least the report of Roberts returning from the holy wars (beeing now in Apulia comming home) might be noysed abroad to stagger the State, which seemed generally willing to accept of Henry.

The first actions of his gouernement tended Z 2 all,

all, to bate the people, and sugar their subiecti-on, as his predecessor, vpon the like interposition had done, but with more moderation and aduisednesse: this beeing a Prince better recti-fied in iudgement, and of a Nature more alayed, both by his sufferings, hauing sighed with other men vnder the hand of oppresion, that taught him patience, and also by hauing somewhat of the Booke, which got him opinion, &
the Title of Beauclerke.

First, to fasten the Cleargy, hee furnishes with fit men, all those Vacancies which his Brother had kept empty, recalls Anselme home to his Byshoppricke of Canterbury, and restores them to all whatsoever priuiledges had bin infringed by his predecessor. And for the Laity, hee not onely pleased them in their releueuements, but in their passion, by punishing the cheefe Ministers of their exactions, which euermore eases the spleene of the people, glad to discharge their Princes of the euilles doone them (knowing how they cannot worke without hands) and lay them on their Offices, who haue the actiue power, where themselves haue but the passiue, and commonly turne as they are moued.

Raoulfe Byshoppe of Durham, cheefe Counsellor to the late King, a man risen by subtiltie, and his Tongue from infimous condition, to the highest employments, was committed to a straight

straight and loathsome prison, beeing framed to haue put his Mayster into all these courses of exaction, and irregularities, and remaynes amongst the examples of perpetuall ignomi-nic. All dissolute personnes are expelled the Court: the people eased of their impositions, and restored to their lights in the night, which after the Couerser Bell wer forbidden them: vpon great penalty, since the beginning of William the first. Many other good orders for the gouernment of the kingdom are ordained, and besides to make him the more popular and be-loued, he matches in the royall bloode of England, taking to wife Matilde, daughter of Margueret, late Queene of Scots, and Neece to Edgar Atheling, descended from Edmond Ironside.
A Lady that brought with her the inheritance of goodnesse she had from a blessed mother, & with much ado was won from her Cloister, & her vow to God, to discend to the worlde, and be a wife to a King.

Thus stood he entrenched in the State of England, when his Brother Robert returning from the holy warres, and receyued with great applause into his Dutchy of Normandie, shakes
the ground of all this businesse: the first yeare threatning, the second, atriuing with a strong Army at Portsmouth, to recouer the Crowne, appertaining vnto him by the course of right, hauing a mighty partie in England of the

Norman Nobility; who eyther mooued with Conscience or their discontent (a sicknesse rising of selfe opinion, and ouer expectation) made any light occasion the motiue of reuolt. The Armies on both sides meete, and are readie to encounter, when, for auoyding Christian bloud, a treatie of peace was moued, and in the end concluded with these articles: that seeing Henry was borne since his father was king of England, which made him the eldest sonne of a King, though the last of a Duke, and nowe inuested in the Crowne by the act of the kingdom, he should enioy the same during his life, paying to Robert 3000. markes, per annum, and Robert suruiuing, to succeed him: that all who had taken part with Robert shoulde haue their pardon, and receiue no detriment.

This businesse thus fairely passed ouer, Robert of a generous and free Nature, staies and feasts with his Brother heere in England, from the beginning of August till Michaelmas, and then returnes into Normandy. When Henrie, ridde of this feare, takes to a higher strayne of Regality, and now standes vppon his Prerogatiue, for the inuestitures of Bishops, and collation of other Ecclesiasticall estates, within his kingdome, oppugned by Anselme, who refused to consecrate such as he preferred, alledging it to bee a violation of the Sacred Rites and Ceremonies of the Church, lately Decreed creed concerning this businesse: in so much as the king dispatches an Embassage to Pope Paschal, with declaration of the right hee had to such inuestitures, from his Predecessours, the Kinges of England, who euermore conferred the same without interruption, til now of late.

Anselme followes after these Ambassadors, goes likewise to Rome, to make good the opposition. The King banishes him the kingdome, and takes into his handes the Bishoppicke. The Pope standes stiffly to the power assumed by the Church, but in the end, seeing the King fast, strong, and lay too farre off out of his way to bee constrained, and hauing much to doe at that time with the Emperour, and other Princes, about the same businesse, takes the way of perswasion to draw him to his will, soliciting him with kind Letters, ful of protestations, to further any designs of his, that might concern his State, if he would desist from this proceeding.

The King prest with some other occasions, that held him in, and hauing purposes of that Nature, as by forbearance of the Church, might be the better effected, consents to satisfie the Popes will: and becomes an example to other Princes, of yeelding in this case. Anselme is re-called, after a yeares bannishment, and the Ambassadors returne with large remunerations.

Whilst

Whilest these thinges were managing at Rome, there burst out here a flame, which consumed the parties that raised it, and brought the King more easily to his endes, then otherwise he could euer haue expected. Robert de Belesme, Earle of Shrewsbury, sonne to Roger de Mongomerie, a very fierce youth, presuming of his great estate, and his friendes, fortifies his Castles of Shrewsburie, Bridgenorth, Tickhill, and Arundel, with some other peeces in Wales belonging to him, and combines with the Welch, to oppose against the present State, out of a desire to set all in combustion, for his owne ends, that were altogether vncertaine, which put the King to much trauell & charge, but within thirty dayes, by employing great forces and terrors mixt with promises, he scattered his complices, and tooke all his Castles, except that of Arundell, which rendred vppon condition, that the Mayster might be permitted to retire safe into Normandy; which the King easily granted, seeing now he was but the bodye of a silly naked Creature, that had lost both Feathers and winges. And it made well for the King, his going thither. For, from the loosing of his owne estate in England, and thereby aduancing the kings reuenues, he goes to loose Normandy also, and bring it to this Crowne. For, as soone as he came thither, he fastens amity with one of like condition, and

fortune as himselfe, an exiled man, whose insolency had likewise stript him out of all his estate in England, and much wasted that in Normandy, which was William Earle of Mortaigne, Sonne to Robert, halfe Brother to king William 1. Who being also Earle of Cornewal, made sute likewise, to haue that of Kent: which his vnckle Odon lately held, but being denied it, and also enited by lawe, of certaine other parcels of Lande, which hee claimed, retyres with great indignation into Normandy, where not onely he assaults the Kings Castles, but also v-surpes vpon the State of Richard, the yong Earle of Chester, then the Kings ward.

These two Earles Combine themselves, and with their Adherentes committed many out-ragious actions, to the great spoyle and displeasure of the Countrey, whereof, though they complained to Duke Robert, they founde little remedy. For, he being now grown poore by his out-lauishing humour, began it seemes, to be little respected: or els false from action, and those greatneses his expectation had shewed him, was (as commonly great mindes dasht with ill fortunes are) false likewise in spirit, and giuen ouer to his ease. Whereupon the people of Normandy make their exclamations to the King of England, who sends for his Brother Robert, reprehendes him for the sufferance of these disorders; aduises him to

aſt the part of a Prince, and not a Monke : and in concluſion, whitherby detention of his penſion, or drawing him, being of a facile nature, to ſome aſt of releaſing it, ſends him home ſo much diſcontented, as hee ioynes with theſe mutinous Earles, and by their inſtigati- on, was ſet into that flame, as hee rayſed all his vmoſt forces to be reuenged on his brother.

The King, touched in Conſcience with the fowlenesse of a fraternal war, which the world would take (he being the mightier) to proceed out of his deſignes ; ſtoode doubtfull what to do, when Pope Paschall, by his Letters (written with that eloquence, ſayeth Malmesburie, wherein he was quicke) perſwaded him, that heerein he ſhould not make a ciuil Warre, but doo a Noble and memorable benefite vnto his Country. Whereby (payde for remitting the Inueſtitures) he helde himſelfe countenanced in this buſineſſe. Whereon, now hee ſets with more alacrity and reſolution. And after many difficulties, and loſſe of diuers worthy men, in a mighty battell, neer the Caſtle of Tenechbray, his enemies with much ado, were all defeated. Whereby England wonne Normandy, and on the ſame day, by Computation, wherein forty yeares before, Normandy ouer-came England, ſuch are the turnings in affayres of men.

And heere Robert, who ſtood in a faire poſſibility ſibility of two Crownes, came to be deprived of his Dutchy, and all he had brought priſoner into England, and committed to the Caſtle of Cardiffe. Where, to adde to his miſery, he had the miſfortune of a long life, ſuruiuing after he loſt himſelfe 26. yeares, whereof the moſt part he ſaw not, hauing his eyes put out, whereby he was onely left to his thoughts, a punniſhment barbarouſly inflicted on him, for attempting an eſcape.

He was a Prince, that gaue out to the world, very few notes of his ill, but many of his Nobleneſſe and valour, eſpecially in his great voyage, wherein he had the ſecond command, and was in election to haue been the firſt preferred to the Crown of Ieruſalem, and miſſed it hardly. Onely the diſobedience in his youth ſhewed to his Father (which yet might proceede from a rough hand borne ouer him, and the animation of others, rather then his owne Nature) ſet a ſtayne vpon him : and then, his proſuſion, (which ſome would haue liberality) ſhewed his impotency, and put him into thoſe courſes that ouerthrew him. All the Reuenues of his Dutchy, which ſhould ſerue for his maintenance, hee ſolde or engaged, and was vpon paſſing the Citty of Roane vnto the Cittizens, which made him held vnſit for the gouernment, and gaue occaſion to his Brother to quarrell with him.

And thus came Henry freed from this feare, and absolute Duke of Normandy : had many yeares of quyet, gathered great Treasure, and entertained good intelligence with the neighbour Princes. Scotland, by his Match, and dooing their Princes good, hee helde from doing him hurte; clearing them from vsurpations. Wales, though vnder his Title, yet not subiection, gaue him some exercise of action; which he ordered with great wisdome. First he planted within the body of that Countrey, a Colonie of Flemings, who at that time much pestred this kingdome: beeing admitted heere in the raigne of king William 1. marrying their Country woman, and vsing their helpe in the action of England, where they dayly encreased, in such sort, as gaue great displeasure to the people. But by this meanes, both that grievance was eased, and the vse of them made profitable to the State: for beeing so great a number, & a strong people, they made roome for themselves, and helde it in that sort, as they kept the Welch, all about them, in verie good awe. Besides, the King tooke for Ostages the cheefe mens sons of the Country, and heereby quieted it. For France he stood secure, so long as Phillip the first liued, who, wholly giuen o-uer to his ease and Luxury, was not for other attempts, out of that course: but his sonne he was to looke vnto, whensoever he came to that that Crowne.

With the Earle of Flaunders he had some debate, but it was onely in words, and vppon this occasion. King William the first, in retribution of the good his Father in lawe, Baldouin the first had doone, by ayding him in the action of England, gaue him yearely three hundred markes, and likewise continued it to his sonne after him. Now, Robert Earle of Flaunders, of a collaterall line, returning empty from the holyc warres, and finding this sum paide out of England to his predecessors, demaunds the same of King Henrie, as his due; who not easie to part with money, sends him word; that it was not the custome of the kings of England to pay tribute: If they gaue pensions they were temporary, and according to desert. Which answer so much displeased the Earle, that though himselfe liued not to shew his hatred, yet his Sonne did, and ayded afterward William, the sonne of Robert Cu-toys, in his attempts, for recovery of the dutchy of Normandy, against king Henrie.

Thus stood this king in the first part of his raigne: in the other, hee had more to doo abroad then at home, where hee had by his excellent wisdome so settled the gouernment, as it held a steady course without interruption, all his time. But now Lewis le Gros, succeeding his father Phillip the first, gaue him warning to looke to his State of Normandy : and for that he would not attend a quarrell, he makes one; taking occasion about the Citty of Gisors, situate on the Riuer Epre, in the confines of Normandie, whilst Louys was trauayled with a stubborne Nobility, presuming vppon their Franchises, within their owne Signories, whereof there were many, at that time, about Paris, as the Contes of Crecy, Pisieux, Dammartin, Champaigne, and others, who by example, and emulation, would bee absolute Lords, without awe of a Mayster, putting them-selues vnder the protection of Henry, who being neere to assist them, fostred those humors, which in sicke bodies most shew themselves. But after Louys, by yeares gathering strength, dissolued that compact, and made his meanes the more, by their confiscations.

Now to entertaine these two great Princes in worke, the quarrell betweene the Pope and the Emperour, ministred fresh occasion. The Emperour Henry the fift, hauing (by the Popes instigation) banded against his Father, Henric the fourth, who associated him in the Empire, & held him prisoner in that distresse, as he died, toucht afterwarde with remorse of this acte, and reproach of the State, for abandoning the rightes of the Empyre, leauies sixty thousand foote, and thirty thousand horse, for Italy, constraines the Pope and his Coledge to acknowledge the rights of the Empyre, in that forme as Leo the fourth, had done to Otho the second, and before that, Adrian to Charlemaigne, according to the Decree of the Counsell of Rome, & made him take his Oath of fidelity between his hands, as to the true and lawfull Emperour. The Pope, so soone as Henry was departed home, assembles a Counsell, nullifies this acknowledgement, as done by force, and shortly after deceased. The Emperour, to make himselfe the stronger against his successors, enters into aliance with the King of England, takes to wife his daughter Maud, being but siue yeares of age. After this, Calixte sonne of the Conte de Burgoigne, comming to be Pope, and beeing French (vnto their great applause) assembles a Counsell at Reimes; where, by Ecclesiasticall sentence, Henry the fift is declared enemy of the Church, and degraded of his Imperiall Dignity. The King of England, seeing this Counsell was held in France, and composed cheefely of the Gallicane Church, desirous to ouer-master Louys; incenses his sonne in law the Emperour (stung with this disgrace) to set vpon him (as the Popes cheefe pillar) on one side, and he would assaile him on the other. The Emperour easily wrought to such a businesse, prepares all his best forces: the King of England dooeth the like.

The King of France seeing this storme comming

ming so impetuously vpon him, wrought so with the Princes of Germany, as they, weighing the future mischiefe of a warre, yndertaken in a heate, with the importaunce of a kind Neighbour-hood, aduise the Emperour not to enter thereinto, till hee had signified to the King of France, the causes of his discontent.

Whereupon an Embassage is dispatched: the King of France aunsweres, that he grieved much to see the two greatest Pillers of the Church, thus shaken with these dissentions, whereby might bee feared, the whole frame would be ruined: that hee was friend to them both, and would gladly bee an inter-dealer for concorde, rather then to carry wood to a fire too fierce already, which hee desired to extinguish, for the good and quyet of Christendome.

This Embassage wrought so, as it disarmed the Emperour, glad to haue Louys a mediator of the accord betweene the Pope and him: to the great displeasure of the King of England, who expected greater matters to haue risen by this businesse. The accorde is concluded at Wormes, to the Popes aduantage, to whom the Emperour yeelds vp the right of inuestitures of Byshoppes and other Benefices. But this was onely to appease, not cure the malady.

The King of England disappointed thus of the Emperours assistance, proceeds notwithstanding standing in his intentions against Louys. And seeing he fayled of outward forces, he sets vp a party in his Kingdome, to confront him: ayding Theobald, Conte de Champagne, with so great power, as hee stood to do him much displeasure: besides, he obtained a strong side in that Kingdome, by his aliances: for Stephen, Earle of Blois, had married his Sister Adela, to whom this Theobald was neere in blood, and had won Foulke, Earle of Aniou (an important neighbour, and euer an enemy to Normandy) to be his, by matching his sonne William to his Daughter.

Louys on the other side, failes not to practise all meanes to vnder-woorke Henries estate in Normandy, and combines with William, Earle of Flanders, for the restoring of William, the sonne of Robert Curtoys, to whom the same appertained by right of inheritance: and had the fairer shew of his Actions, by taking holde on the side of Iustice.

Great and many were the conflicts between these two Princes, with the expence of much blood and charge. But in the end, beeing both tyred, a peace was concluded by the mediation of the Earle of Aniou. And William, Sonne to King Henry, did homage to Louys for the Duchy of Normandy: And William, the Sonne of Robert Curtoys, is left to himselfe, and desistes from his claime.

Anno Reg. 20.

Queene Maude
liued not to see this disaster

Anno Reg. 21.

Vpon the faire cloze of all these troubles, there followed presently an accident, which seasoned it with that sowrenesse of greefe, as ouercame all the ioy of the successe. William the young Prince, the only hope of all the Norman race, at 17. yeares of age, returning into England in a Ship by himselfe, accompanied with Richard his base Brother, Mary, Countesse of Perch, their sister, Richard, Earle of Chester, with his wife the Kings Neece, and many other personages of honour, and their Attendants, to the number of 140. besides 50. Marriners, setting out from Harflew, were all cast away at Sea. The Prince had recouered a Cocke-boat, and in possibility to haue beene saued, had not the compassion of his Sisters cries drawne him backe to the sinking Ship to take her in, and perish with his company.

Which suddaine clap of Gods iudgement, comming in a calme of glory, when all these bustlings seemed past ouer, might make a conscience shrink with terror, to see oppression & supplantation repayde with the extinction of that, for which so much had beene wrought, and the line masculine of Normandy expyred in the third heire, as if to begin the fate laid on all the future succession, wherein neuer, but once, the third in a right discent, enioyed the Crowne without supplantation or extinction, to the great affliction of the Kingdome and himselfe himselfe, to leaue his other yssue subiect to the like ouer-turninges; which may teach Princes to obserue the wayes of righteousness, & let men alone with their rightes, and God with his prouidence.

But in hope to repayre this losse, King Henry within five months after, married Adalicia, a beautifull yong Lady, daughter to the Duke of Louaine, and of the house of Lorraine, but neuer had yssue by her, nor long rest from his troubles abroad. For this rent at home, crackt all the chaine of his courses in Fraunce. Normandie it selfe became wauering, and many adhered to William the Nephew: his great confederats are most regayned to the king of Fraunce; Foulke, Earle of Anion, quarrels for his daughters dower: Robert de Mellent, his chiefe friend and counsellour, a man of great employment, fell from him, conspired with Hugh Earle of Monfort, and wrought him great trouble.

But such was his diligence and working spirit, that hee soone made whole all those ruptures againe. The two Earles himselfe surprizes, and Anion, death: which beeing so important a Neighbour, as we may see, by matching a Prince of England there, the king fastens vpon it with another aliance, and discendes to marry his Daughter, (and nowe onely childe, which had bin wife to an Emperor, and desired by the Princes of Lumbardy and Lorraine) to the now Earle Geffrey Plantagenet, the Sonne of Fouke.

The King of France to fortifie his opposition, entertaines William the Nephew, where now all the danger lay: and aydes him in person with great power to obtaine the Earldome of Flanders, whereunto he had a faire Title, by the defaillance of yssue of the late Earle Baldouin, slaine in a battaile in France against King Henry. But William, as if heire also of his Fathers fortunes, admitted to the Earldome, miscarried in the rule, was deprived, and slaine in battaile; and in him all of Robert Curtoys perished.

And now the whole care of King Henry, was the settling of the succession vppon Maude (of whom he liued to see two Sonnes borne) for which hee conuokes a Parliament in England, wherein an oath is ministred to the Lordes of this land, to be true to her and her heires, and acknowledge them as the right Inheritours of the Crowne. This oath was first taken by David, King of Scots, vnckle to Maude, and by Stephen, Earle of Bollogne, and Mortaine, Nephew to the King, on whom he had bestowed great possessions in England, and aduanced his Brother to the Bishopricke of Vinchester. And to make all the more fast, this oath was afterward ministred againe at Northampton in another Parliament.

So

So that now all seemes safe and quiet, but his owne sleepes, which are said to haue beene very tumultuous, and full of affrightments, wherein hee would often rise, take his Sword, and bee in Act, as if hee defended himselfe against assaults of his person, which shewed all was not well within.

His gouernment in peace, was such as rankes him in the list amongst our Kings of the fayrest marke: holding the Kingdome so well ordered, as ducing all his raigne, which was long, he had euer the least to doe at home. At the first, the competition with his Brother, after, the care to establish his succession, helde him in, to obserue all the best courses, that might make for the good and quiet of the State; hauing an especiall regarde to the due administration of Iustice, that no corruption or oppression might disease his people, whereby things were carried with that reuennues, betweene the Great men and the Commons, as gaue all satisfaction. He made diuers progresses into remote partes of the Land, to see how the State was ordered. And for that purpose, whensoever he was in England, he kept no certaine residence, but solemnized the great festiualls in seuerall, and far distant places of the Kingdome, that all might partake of him.

And for that he would not wrest any thing by

His gouernment in peace.

The cause of Progresses.

The beginning of Parlements

The first Parliament at Salisbury, Anno Reg. 15.

by an imperiall power from the Kingdome, (which might breede Vicers of dangerous nature) hee tooke a course to obtaine their free consents to serue his occasions, in their general Assemblies of the three Estates of the land, which hee first, and often conuoked: & which hadde, from his time, the Name of Parliament, according to the manner of Normandie, and other States, where Princes keep within their Circles to the good of theyr people, their owne glorie, and securitie of their posterity.

His reforma-
tions.

He was a Prince that lyued formally himselfe, and repressed those excesses in his subiectes which those times entertayned, as the wearing of long hayre, which though it were a gait of no charge, like those sumptuous braueries, that waste kingdomes in peace, yet for the vndeceyency thereof, hee reformed it, and all other dissolutenesse.

His meane to raise monies.

His great businesses, and his wantes taught him frugality, and warynesse of expence, and his warres being seldome inuasive, and so not getting, put him often to vse harde courses for his supplyments of treasure. Towards the marriage of his daughter with the Emperour, and the charge of his Warre, hee obtrayned (as it might seme at his first Parliament at Salisbury,) Anno Reg. 15. three shillings vpon euery hide land, but hee had no more in all his raigne, raigne, except one supply for his warres afterward in France.

He kept Byshoppricks and Abbaies voyd in his handes, as that of Canterbury, fīue yeares together.

By an Act of Parlemt at London. Anno Reg. 30. he had permission to punish marriage, and incontineny of priests, who for fines notwithstanding, he suffered to enioy their Wines, but thereby he displeased the Cleargy, and disappointed that reformation.

Punnishments, which were mutilation of member, he made pecuniary. And by reason of his often and long beeing in Normandy, those prouisions for his house, which were vsed to bee paid in kinde, were rated to certaine prices and receiued in Mony, by the consent of the State, and to the great content of the subiect; who by reason that many dwelling far off throughout all shires of England, were much molested with satisfying the same otherwise. He resumed the liberties of hunting in his Forests, which tooke vp much faire ground of the kingdome; and besides, renewing former penalties, made an Edict, that if any man in his owne priuate Woods killed the Kings Decree, should forfeit his Woods to the King. But hee permitted them inclosure for Parkes, which vnder him seemes to haue their originall, by the example of that of his at Woodstoke, and after their their multitude grew to be a diseaze.

His expences were cheefely in his Warres, and his many and great fortifications in Normandy. His buildings were the Abbay of Reading, the Mannor of Woodstoke, and the great inclosure about that Parke.

His Councellors.

The most eminent Men of his Counsell, were, Roger Byshop of Sarum, and the Earle of Mellent, both Men of great experience in the affaires of the World. Roger was euer as Viceroy, had the whole mannagement of the Kingdome in his absence, which was sometimes three or foure yeares together. Hee had managed the Kinges Monyes, and other affayres of his House, when hee was a poore Prince, and a priuate man; whereby he gained an especiall trust with him euer after, and discharged his part with great pollicy and vnderstanding; had the Title of Iusticiarius totius Anglia. Of whose magnificence and spacious minde, wee haue more memorials left in notes of Stone, then of any one Man, Prince, or other of his Kingdome. The ruines yet remayning of his stately structures, especially that of the Deuises in Wiltshire, shewes vs the Carkasse of a most Roman-like Fabricke. Besides, hee built the Castles of Malmsburie and Shirburne, two strong and sumptuous peeces: new walled and repayred the Castle of Salisbury, but all these hee liued to see rent from him, him, and seized into the next Kings handes, as being thinges doone out his part, and lye now deformed heapes of rubble. But the goodly Church of Salisbury, a Worke appertayning to his function, remaynes as of another Fate.

Robert Earle of Mellent, was the son of Roger Beaumont; who of all the great men, which followed William the first in his ciuill wars of Normandy, refused to attend him in his expedition for England, thogh with large promises inuited thereunto, saying: The inheritance left him by his predecesors, was sufficient to maintaine his estate at home; and hee desired not to thrust himselfe into other mens possessions abroad. But his sonne Robert was of another minde, and had a mighty estate both in England and Normandy. Was a man of great direction in Counsel, and euer vsed in al the waitty affayres of the State. His parsimony both in apparrell and dyet, was of such example being a man of eminent note, as did much good to the kingdome in those dayes. But in the end he fell into disgrace, the fate of Court and eminency, opposed against the King, and dyed bereft of his estate.

Besides these, this King was serued vvith a potent and martiall Nobility, whom his spirit ledde to affect those great designs of his in Fraunce, for the preservation of his State in Normandy. Whether in two and thirty yeare of his raigne, hee makes his last voyage to dye there, and in his passage thether, happened an exceeding great Ecclips of the Sunne, which was taken to fore-signifie his death, for that it followed shortly after in the thirty five yeare of his raigne.

Nor-

His personage

Hee was of a gracefull personage, quicke-eyed, browne hairè (a different complexion from his Brothers) and of a close compacted temperament, wherein dwelt a mind of a more solid constitution, with better ordered affections. He had (in his youth) some tast of learning; but onely, as if to set his stomacke, nor to ouer-charge it therewith. But this put many of his subiectes into the fashion of the Booke, and diuers Learned men flourished in his time.

King Stephen.

HE Line Masculine of the Norman extinct, and onelic a Daughter left, and she married to a French-man: Stephen, Earle of Bologne and Mortaigne, sonne of Stephen, Earle of Blois, and of Adela Daughter to William the first, was notwithstanding the former oath taken for Maud, elected electèd by the State, and inuested in the crown of England, within thirty daies after the death of Henry. Vpon what reasons of Councell, we must gather out of the circumstances of the courses held in that time.

Some imagine, the state refused Maud, for not being then the custome of any other kingdome Christian (whose Kinges are annointed) to admit women to inherite the Crowne; and therefore they might pretend to be freed from their Oath, as being vnlawfull. But Roger, Bishop of Salisbury, one of the principall Men then in Counsell, yeelded another reason for the discharge of his Oath, which was, that seeing the late King had marryed his Daughter out of the Realme, and without the consent thereof, they might lawfully refuse her. And so was Stephen, hauing no Title at all, by meere election, aduanced to the Crowne. For if he should claime any right in the Succession, as being the Sonne of Adela, then must Theobald, Earle of Blois, his elder Brother, haue beene preferred before him: and Henry Fitz Empresse (if they refused the Mother) was neerer in blood to the right Stem, then eyther. But they had other reasons that ruled that time. Stephen was a man, and of great possessions, both in England and France, had one brother, Earle of Blois, a Prince of great estate: another, Bishop of Winchester (the Popes Legat in England, of Prince of Scotland with the Earledom of Huntingdon; the last tooke an Oath of fealty vnto him, which the Father refused as hauing first sworne to Maud, wherein he satisfied not the King, who returning from this voyage found some defection of his Nobility, which presently put him into another action, that intertayned him sometime. After which, he falles dangerously sicke, insomuch as hee was noyed to bee dead, by which sicknesse, hee lost more then his health: For his Friends, put in daunger thereby, cast to seeke another party to beare them vp: it wakened Aniou, and sets him on to surprize certain peeces in Normandy, to prepare for the recouery of his Wiues right: and made all this Kingdome wauer. Thus was his first yeare spent, which shewed howe the rest of eightene would proue, wherein we are to haue no other representations, but of reuolues, besiedging of Castles, surprizinges, recouerings, loosings againe, with great spoyles, and destruction; in breefe, a most miserable face of a distracted State, that can yeeld vs no other notes of instruction, but such as are generall in all times of like disposition: and therefore heerein we may the better forbear the rehearfall of many particulars, being all vnder one head of action, and like nature.

The King hauing recouered, would make the

the Worlde know he was aliue, and presently passes with forces into Normandie, ouercame the Earle of Aniou in battayle: after, makes peace with him, and vpon renouncing of the claime of Maud, couenants to giue them five thousand Markes, per annum: hee entertaynes amity with King Louys the seauenth, and causes his Sonne Eustace to doo him homage for the Dutchy of Normandy, wherein hee was inuested: besides, to content his elder brother Theobald, Earle of Blois, hee giues him a pension of two thousand markes, and so returnes agayne into England, to war against Scotland, which, in this meane time, made incursions on the Kingdome; where, whilst he was held busie in worke, Rebert Earle of Glocester, base sonne to Henry the first, a man of high Spirite, great direction, and indefatigable industry (an especial actor that perfourmed the greatest part, in these times, for his sister Maud) had surprized the Castle of Brislow, & procured confederates to make good other peeces abroad in diuers parts; as William Talbot, the Castle of Hereford; Paynel the Castle of Ludlow; Lonel that of Cary; Moune the Castle of Dunstow; Robert de Nichol, that of Warham, Eustace Fitz-Iohn that of Walton, & William Fitz-Allan the Castle of Shrewsbury.

Stephen leaues the prosecution of the Scottish warres to Thurstan Arch byshop of Yorke, whom whom he made his Lieutenant, and furnished with many valiant Leaders, as Walter Earle of Albemarle, William Peverel of Nottingham; Walter and Gilbert Lacies. Himselfe brauely attended, bends al his power to repress the conspirators, which he did in one expedition, recouers all these Castles (by reason of their distances, not able to succour one another) and draue the Earle of Gloucester home to his sister into Anion.

No lesse successe hadde his forces in the North, against the Scots, whom in a great battayle they discomfited, and put them to flight, which great Fortunes meeting together, in one yeare, brought soorth occasion of bad, in that following; for nowe presuming more of himselfe, hee fell vpon those rockes that rent all his greatnesse. Hee calles a Councell at Oxford, where occasion was giuen to set him out with the Clergie, that had onely put him into the State. The Bishops vpon the permission of building Castles, so outwent the Lords in magnificence, strength, and number of their erections, and especially the Byshoppe of Salisbury, that their greatnesse was much maligned by them, putting the King in heade, that all these great Castles, especially of Salisbury, the Vies, Shirburne, Malmesbury, and Newmarke, were onely to entertaine the partie of Maude, whereupon the King, whose fears were apt to take take fire, sends for the Bishop of Salisbury (most suspected) to Oxford. The Byshop, as it foreseeing the mischeefe comming to him, would gladly haue put off this iourney, and excused it by the debility of his age, but it would not serue his turne: thether hee comes, where his seruants, about the taking vp of lodgings, quarrell with the Seruants of the Earle of Brittaine, and from Wordes, fall to blowes, so that in the bickering, one of them was slaine, and the Nephew of the Earle dangerously wounded. Whereupon, the King sendes for his Byshop, to satisfie his Court, for the breach of peace made by his seruants. The satisfaction required, was the yeelding vp the keyes of his Castles, as plegges of his fealty, but that beeing stood vpon, the Byshop with his Nephew Alexander Byshop of Lincolne, were restrained of their liberty, and shortly after sent as prisoners to the Castle of the Deuises, whether the Byshop of Eley, another of his Nephewes, had retired himselfe before. The King seizes into his handes his Castles of Salisbury, Shirburne, Malmesbury, and after three dayes assault, the Deuises was likewise rendered, besides he tooke all his treasure, which amounted to forty thousand markes.

This action, beeing of an extraordinarie strayne, gaue much occasion of rumor: some sayde, The King had donne well in seazing vpon these these Castles; it being unfit, and against the Canons of the Church, that they who were men of Religion and peace, should raise Fortresses for Warre, and in that sort as might bee prejudicial against the king.

Against this, was the Bysnoppe of Winchester, the popes Legat, taking rather the part of his function, then that of a Brother, saying; That if the Bishops had transgressed, it was not the king, but the Cannons that must iudge it: that they ought not to be deprived of their possessions, without a publique Ecclesiastical Counsel: that the king had not done it out of the zeale of Iustice, but for his own benefit, taking away that which had beene built upon the Lands, and by the charge of the Church, to put it into the handes of Lay-men; little affected to religion. And therefore, to the end the power of the Cannons might be examined, he appointed a Counsel to be called at Winchester, whither the King is summoned: and thither repair most of all the Bishops of the Kingdom, where first is read the Commission of the Legatine power, granted by Pope Innocent to the bishop of Winchester, who there openly urges the indignation offered to the Church, by the imprisoning of these Bishops, An act most heinous and shamefull for the king, that in the peace of his Court, through the insligation of euil ministers, wold thus lay handes upon such men, and spoyle them of their estates, which was a violence against GOD.

And

And that seeing the King would yeelde to no admonitions, he had at length called this counsell, where they were to consult what was to bee done: that for his part, neyther the loue of the King, though his brother, nor the losse of his liuing, or danger of his life, should make him fayle in the execution of what they should decree.

The King standing vppon his cause, sendes certayne Earles to this Counsell, to know why he was called thither: answere was made by the Legate, That the king, who was subiect unto the Faith of Christ, ought not to take it ill, if by the Ministers of Christ, hee was called to make satisfaction, being conscious of such an offence, as that age had not knowne: that is was for times of the Gentiles, for Bishops to be imprisoned, and deprived of their possessions, and therefore they should tell the King his Brother, that if he would vouchsafe to yeelde consent to the Counsell, it shoulde bee such, by the helpe of GOD; as neyther the Romaine Church, the Court of the King of Fraunce, nor the Earle Theobald, Brother to them both (a man both wise and religious) shoulde, in reason dislike it: that the King shoulde doo aduisedly, to render the reason of his act, and under-goe a Canonick Iudgement: that hee ought in dutie to fauour the Church, into whose bosome beeing taken, hee was aduanced to the Crowne without any militarie hand.

With which answere the Earles departed, attended with Alberic de Ver, a man exercised in the Law, and hauing related the same, are returned with the Kings releye, which Alberic vtters, and urges the iniuries byshop Roger hadde done vnto the King: how hee seidome came to his Court: that his men, presuming vppon his power, had offered violence to the Nephew and seruants, of the Earle of Brittain, and to the seruants of Herui de Lyons, a man of that Nobilitie and shortnesse, as would neuer vouchsafe to come vpon any request to the late King, and yet for the loue of this, was desirous to see England: where, to haue this violence offered was an iniurie vnto the King, and dishonour to the Realme, that the Byshop of Lincolne, for the auncient hatred which he bare to the Earle of Brittain, was the Authour of his mens sedition: that the Byshoppe of Salisbury secretly fauoured the Kings enemies; and did but sublely temporize, as the King had found by diuers circumstances; especially, when Roger de Mortimer, sent with the Kings forces, in the great danger of Bristow, he would not lodge him one Night in Malmesbury: that it was in euery mans mouth, as soone as the Empreſſe came, He and his nephewes would render their Castles vnto him. That hee was arrested, not as a Byshop, but a seruant to the King, and one that administred his procurations, and receiued his monyes. That the King tooke not his Castles by violence, but the byshop voluntarily rendred them, to auoyde the calumnie of their tumult, raised sed in his Court: if the king found some mony in his Castles, he might lawfully seaze on it, in regard that Roger had collected it, out of the renennewes of the king his vncle and predecessor: and the Byshoppe willingly yeelded up the same, as wel as his Castles, through feare of his offences; and of this, wanted not witnesſes of the kings, whopart desired that the covenants, made betweene him and the byshop, might remaine ratified.

Against this, Byshop Roger opposes: That hee was neuer seruant to the king, nor receyued his monies; and withal, added threatninges, as a man, not yet broken, though bent with his fortunes: that if hee found not Iustice for his wronges in that Counsell, hee would bring it to the hearing of a greater Court.

The Legat, mildly, as hee did other things, sayde: That al what was spoken against the bishops, ought first to be examined in the Ecclesiastical counsell, whether they were true or no, before sentence should haue beene giuen against them, contrarie to the Cannons: and therefore, the king shoulde, as it is lawfull in iudiciall trialles, reuest the byshoppes in their former estates, otherwise, by the Lawe of Nations, beeing dissaised, they shall not holde their Plea.

After much debate the Kings cause was, vpon a motion, put off till the nexte day, to the end the Arch-bishop of Rome, an especial Instrument for the King, might bee there; who deliuering his opinion, sayd: That if the Byshops could rightly proue by the canons, they ought to haue Castles, they should holde them; but if they could not, it proceeded of great improbitie to strue to doo otherwise. And bee it, sayd he, their right to haue them, yet in a suspected time, according to the manner of other Nations, al great men ought to deliuer the keyes of their Fortresses, to be at the kings pleasure, who is to fight for the peace of all. But it is not their right, by the decree of the Canons, to haue Castles; and if, by the Princes indulgence, it be tollerated, yet in a time of necessity, they ought to deliuer the keyes.

The Lawyer Alberic addes: That it was signified vnto the King, how the Byshoppes threatned, & had already furnished some to go to Rome against him. But, sayde he, the King would haue you knowe, that none of you presume to doo it: for, if anie goe out of England; contrary to his will, and the dignity of the kingdome, it wil be hard returning.

In conclusion, the Counsell brake vppe, nothing was done. The Byshops durst not excommunicat the King, without the Popes priuie: and besides, they saw the swords too busie about them: yet failed not the Legat & the Arch-bishop to prosecute their parts, & from authority fell to Prayer, and at the Kings seete, in his chamber, besought him, that he would pittie the Church, pittie his owne soule, and his Fame, not to suffer dissention to bee betweene the Kingdome dome and the Priest-hoode. The King returned them faire wordes, but held what hee had gotten.

Shortly after, through greefe dyed the Byshop of Salisbury, and (according to the fate of ouer-eminent and greedy Officers) vnpittied. He was a man, in his latter time, noted of much corruption, and vnsatiable desire of hauiug. For whom the present King in the beginning of his raigne, had doone very much, making one of his Nephewes Chancellor, the other Treasurer; and vpon his sute, gaue to himselfe the Borough of Malmesbry, in somuch, as the King would say to his familiars about him: If this man wil begge thus stil, I will giue him halfe the kingdome but I will please him: and first shall hee bee weary of crauing, ere I of graunting. And sure the King hadde great reason to suspect his adhering to Maud, whose part hee beganne to fauour: onely, out of the hatred hee bare vnto Winchester, who yet was content to forsake his own Brother, in regard, by his ingagement hee was preferred to the Crowne, rather then to loose his good will, and the rest of the Clergie.

But yet this breaking of the King into the Church, which had made him, vtterly dissolued him. For presently heereupon, al his power fell assunder; the Empreffe found nowe a way open to let her in, and the Earle of Glocester ster, presuming of a sure side, conducted her into England, onely with one hundred and fifty men, puts her into the Castle of Arundell, and himselfe, attended but with twelue horse, passed away cleare through all the Countrey, to Brislow, and from thence to Glocester, where he had leysure, without opposition, to raise all the Countrey, to take part with the Empres, who from Arundell Castle, was afterwarde by the Legate himself, and the Kings permission, conueyed to Brislow, receyued with all obedience, grew daily in strength, as shee went and came, at length to her Brother (who had taken in Hereford, made himself strong with the Welsh, & seiled those parts) to gather vpp more of the kingdome by shewing her selfe and her power in diuers places.

Stephen, hauing no part cleere, by reason the Castles, vppon which hee spent both his time and meanes, lay so thicke blockes in his way, as he could not make that speede to stop this streame, as otherwise he would, holding it not safe to goe forward, and leaue dangers behinde, that might ouer-take him. And first, he layes siede vnto the Castle of Wallingford, which Brian, Sonne to the Earle of Glocester, helde against him: then, to the Castle of Brislow, and other places, working much, but effecting little: which seeing, to get time, and stagger the swift proceedings of this new re-ceined Princeesse, hee causes a treatie of peace to bee propounded at Bath, where the Legate, (who likewise earnestly solicited the same) with the Arch-bishop of Canterbury, were appointed Commissioners for the King; and the Earle of Glocester for the Empresse; but nothing was effected, both returne to make good their sides. The Empresse seekes to recover more, the King what hee had lost. And least the North parts might fall from him, and the King of Scottes come on, he repayres thitherward: and finding the Castle of Lincolne possesed by Ralfe Earle of Chester, who had married a Daughter of the Earle of Glocester, and holding it not safe to be in the handes of such a Maister, in such a time, seekes to take it in by force. The Earle of Chester, who held New-trall, attempting nothing against the King, tooke it ill, and stode vpon his defence; but being ouer-layd by power, conueyes himselfe out of the Castle, leaues his Brother and Wife within, to defend it, and procures ayde of his Father in law, the Earle of Glocester, to succour him.

The Earle takes in hand this businesse, sets out of Glocester with an Army of Welshmen, and others, attended with Hugh Bigod, and Robert de Morley, ioynes with the Earle of Chester, marches to Lincolne, where, in the battaile, King Stephen was taken, carried prisoner to

Glocester, presented to the Empresse, and by hir sent to be kept in the castle of Bristow, but in all honorable fashion, till his attempts to escape, layd fetters on him.

Heereupon, the Empresse (as the top of her fortune) labours the Legate to be admitted to the Kingdom, as the Daughter of the late king, to whom the realme had taken an Oath to accept for soueraigne in the succession, & wrought so, as a parle was apointed for this purpose, on the Plaine neere to Winchester, where, in a blustering sad day, like the fate of the businesse, they met, and the Empresse swore, and made affidavit to the Legat, that all the great businesse, and especially the donation of Byshoppricks and Abbies, should be at his disposing, if he (with the Church) would receive her as Queene of England, and hold perpetuall fidelity vnto her. The same Oath and affidavit took likewise her Brother Robert Earle of Gloucester, Brian his sonne, Marquesse of Wallingforde; Miles of Gloucester (after earl of Hereford) with many others for her. Nor did the Byshop sticke to accept her as Queen (though she neuer came to be so) and with some fewe other, made likewise affidavit for his part, that so long as shee infringed not her covenant, he would also hold his fidelity to her.

The next day she was receiued with solemn procession into the Byshops Church at Winchester, chester, the Byshoppe leading her on the right hand, and Bernard, Byshop of Saint Dauids, on the left. There were present many other Byshops, as Alexander Byshop of Lincolne, & Nigel Bishop of Ely (the nephews of Roger, lately imprisoned) Robert Bishop of Bath, and Robert Bishop of Worcester, with many Abbots.

Within a few dayes after, came Theobalde, Archbishop of Canterbury, to the Empresse, inuited by the Legat; but deferred to doe fealtie vnto her, as holding it vnwoorthy his person, and place, without hauing conferred first with the King. And therefore, hee with many Prelates, and some of the Laity, by permission obtained, went to the King to Bristow. The Councell brakes vp: the Empresse keepe her Easter at Oxford, being her owne towne. Shortly vpon Easter a Councell of the Cleargie is againe called to Winchester, where the first day the Legate had secret Conference with euery Byshop apart, and then with euery Abbot, and other which were called to the Councell: the next day he makes a publicke speech, Shewing how the cause of their Assembly, was, to consult for the peace of their Countrey, in great danger of utter ruine. Repeats the flourishing raigne of his Vncle; the peace, wealth, and honour of the kingdom in his time: and howe that renowned king, many yeares before his death, had receiued an Oath both of England and Normandie, for the succession from of his Daughter Maude and her Issue . . . But, saide he, after his decease, his Daughter being thome in Normandie, making delay to come into England, where (for that it seemed long to expect) order was to bee taken for the peace of the Countrey, and my Brother was permitted to raigne. And although I interposed my selfe a surety between GOD and him, that he should honour and exalt the holy Church, keepe, and ordaine good Lawes; Yet, how he hath behaved himselfe in the kingdome, it grieues me to remember, and I am ashamed to repeat. And then recounts hee all the Kinges courses with the Bishops, and all his other misgovernments.

And then, sayde he, every mans knowes I ought to loue my mortal Brother, but much more the cause of my immortall Father: and therefore seeing GOD hath shewed his iudgment on my Brother, and suffered him, without my knowledge, to fall into the hand of Power: that the kingdome may not miscarrie for want of a Ruler; I haue called you all hither by the power of my Legation. Yesterday, the cause was moued in secret, to the greatest part of the Cleargie, to whom the right appertaines to elect and ordaine a Prince. And therefore, after hauing inuoked, as it is meete, the Diuine ayde, wee elect for Queene of England, the Daughter of the peacefull, glorious, rich, good, and in our time the incomparable King, and to her wee promise our Faith and allegiance.

When

When all, who were present, either modestly gaue their voyce, or by their silence contradicted it, the Legate addes: The Londoners, who are, in respect of the greatnesse of their Cittie, as among the optimacie of England, wee haue by our Messengers summoned, and I trust they will not stay beyond this day; to morrowe, wee will expect them.

The Londoners came, were brought into the Councell, shewed, How they were sent from the Communitie of London, not to bring contention, but Prayer, that the King their Lord might be freed from Captiuitie, and the same did all the Parones (receyued within their Liberties) earnestly beseech of my Lord Legate, and al the Cleargie there present.

The Legat answeres them at large, and loftily, according to his speech the day before, & added, That the Londoners, who were helde in that degree in England, ought not to take their partes, who had forsaken their lord in the war, by whose Councell the Church hadde beene dishonoured, and who fauoured the Londoners but for their owne gaine:

Then standes there vp a Chaplayne vnto Queene Maude, wife to Stephen, and deliuers a Letter to the Legat, which he silently reade, and then saide alowde, That it was not lawfull in the assembly of so manie reuerence and Religious persons, the same should be publickely read, contay-

ning matter reprehensible. The Chaplayn not to fayle in his message, boldly reads the letter him selfe, which was to this effect: That the Queene earnestly entreats all the Cleargie there assembled, and namely the Bysbop of Winchester, the Brother of her Lord, to restore him unto the kingdom, whom wicked men, which were also his subjects, helde prisoner.

To this the Legate answeres, as to the Londoners, and shortly after, the Councell brake vp; wherein many of the Kinges part were excommunicated, namely, William Martell, an especiall wan about the King, who had much displeased the Legate.

Heerupon a great part of England willinglie accepted of Maud, in whose businesses her brother Robert employes all his diligence and best care, reforming Iustice, restoring the lawes of England, promising relieuements, and whatsoever might be to win the people, the Legat seconding all his courses.

But now, shee being at the point of obtayning the whole Kingdome; all came sodainely daht by the practise of the Londoners, who adhering to the other side, beganne openly to inueigh against her, who, in something, whatsoever it were, had displeased them, and they hadde plotted to surprize her in theyr Cittie, wherof shee hauing notice, secretly withdrawing her selfe, accompanied with her vnkle

David

David King of Scottes (who was come to visite her) and her Brother Robert, vnto Oxforde, a place of more security. The Legate himselfe takes, or makes an occasion to be slacke in her cause, vpon her denying him a sute for his Nephew Eustace, the sonne of Stephen, about the inheritaunce of his Earledome of Mortaigne in Normandie. Besides, the Queene regnant, watchfull ouer all opportunitie, found meanes to parle with the Legate, settes vpon him with her teares, intreatie, promises, and assurances for the Kings reformation; in so much, as she recalled him to the affections of nature, brought him about againe to absolue such of the Kinges part, as hee had lately excommunicated.

The Earle of Gloucester, seeing this suddain and straunge relaps of their affayres, thrines by all meanes to hold vp Opinion, and re-quicken the Legats disposition, which to keepe sound, was all. He brings the Empreffe to Winchester, settles her, and her garde, in the Castle, where shee desires to speake with the Legate, who first delayes, then denies to come.

Whereupon they call their best frends about them. Queene Maud, and the Lordes encompassse the Towne, and cut off all Victuall from the Empreffe, so that in the end, the Earle of Gloucester, wrought meanes to haue her conueyed from thence to the Vies, but himself was taken, and in him most of her.

This sets the sides both euen again into the Listes of their triall: the two prisoners are to redeeme each other. The disproportion of the quality betweene them, shewed yet there was an euennesse of power, and the Earle wold not consent to the Kinges deliury (who onely in that was to haue the precdence) but vppon most secure cautions. The Archbyshoppe of Canterbury, and the Legate, vndertook to yeild themselues prisoners for him, if the King releas'd him not, according to his promise but that would not serue the turne, till they both hadde written their Breeses to the Pope, to intimate the course that was taken heerein, and deliuered the same vnto him, vnder their handes and seales. So that, if the King should, as he might not care, to holde the Byshops in prison: yet the Pope, if harde measure were offred, might releue him. Which shewes the aduantage of credite in the businesse, lay on this side, and the King was to haue his Fetters, though at liberty.

The Queene, and Eustace her Sonne, the Prince, vpon the enlargement of Stephen, remaine pledges in the Castle of Brislow, till the Earle was released, which was done vpon the Kings comming to Winchester. Where, the Earle in familiar conference, was, by al art possible, solicited to forsake the partie of Maude, with with promise of all preferments of honour and estate: but nothing could moue him, being fixt to his courses, and rather would he haue beene content to remayne a perpetuall Prisoner, then that Stephen should haue beene released, had not his sister wrought him to this conclusion.

The Legate, after this, calles a Councell at London, where the Popes Letters, written vnto him, are openly reade, which argue him, (but mildely) of some neglect of his Brothers releasing, and exhort him to vse al meanes Ecclesiasticall, and Secular, to set him at libertie.

The King himselfe came into the Councell, complaines, How his subiectes, to whom hee had neuer denyed Iustice, had taken him, and reproachfully afflicted him even to death. The Legate with great eloquence laboures to excuse his owne courses, alledging; How he receiued not the Emperesse by his wil, but necessity: that presently vpon the Kings overthrow, whilst the Lordes were eyther fled, or stood in suspence, attending the euent, she & her people came thundering to the wals of Winchester: and that, what pact soeuer hee had made with her for the right of the Church, she obstinately brake all; besides, he was certainly enformed, that she and hers had plotted, both against his dignitie, and life: But God in his mercie, contrarie to her desire, had turned the businesse so, as hee escaped the daunger, and his Brother was deliuered out of bandes. And therefore hee, from the part of God, and the Pope, will'd them with all their utmost power, to ayde the King, annointed by the consent of the people, and the Sea Apostolique, and to excommunicate all the disturbers of the peace that fauoured the Countesse of Aniou.

There was in the Councell a Lay Agent for the Empreſſe, who openly charged the Legat, That in respect of the Faith hee had giuen the Empreſſe, to passe no acte there, preiudiciall to her Honour: hauing sworne vnto her neuer to aide his brother with about twenty Souldiers, that her comming into England, was upon his often Letters sent vnto her: and his cause it was, that the king was taken and held prisoner. This, and much more sayd the agent with great austerity of words, wherewith the Legate seemed not to be moued at all, nor would stoope to reply.

Both parts thus set at Libertie, were left to worke for themselves, holding the State broken betweene them; and no means made to interpose any barre to keep them assunder. Their borders lay euery where, and then the ingagements of their partakers, who looke all to be sauers, or to recouer their stakes, when they were lost (which makes them neuer giue ouer) entertaine the contention. But the best was, they were rather troubles, then warres, & cost more labour then blood. Euery one fought with with Bucklers, and seldome came to the sharpe in the field, which would soon haue ended the businesse.

Some few monethes after these enlargements, stood both sides at some rest, but not ydle, casting how to compasse their ends. The Empreſſe at the Vies with her counsel, resolves to send ouer her Brother into Normandie, to sollicite her husband the Earle of Aniou, to com to ayde her, with forces from thence. Her Brother, the better to secure her in his absence settles her in the Castle of Oxford, well furnished for all assaultes: and takes with him the sonnes of the especiall men about her, as pledges to hold them to their fidelity. Stephan seeks to stop the Earles passage, but coulde not, and then laies siege to the Castle of Oxford, which helde him all the time the Earle was abroad. Geffrey Earle of Aniou, desirous rather to haue Normandie, whereof, in this meane time, he had attayned the most part, and in possibilitie of the rest, then to aduenture for England, which lay in daunger, refused to come in person, but sends some small ayde, and his eldest sonne Henry, being then but eleauen yeares of age, that hee might looke vppon England, and be shewed to the people, to trie if that would mooue them to a consideration of his right: which proued of more effect then an Armie.

The Earle of Glocester safely returning, makes towards Oxford to relieue the Empresse, who had secretly conueyed her selfe disguised out at a posterne gate, onely with foure persons, got ouer the Thames, passed a foote to Abington, and from thence conuayed to Wallingford, where her Brother & son met her, to hir more comfort after hard distresses.

Stephen seeing his enemy thus supplied, and like to grow, labours to win friendes, but Money failes, which made diuers of his Lords, and especially his Mercinaries, wherof he had many out of Flanders, to fall to the rising of Abeyes, which was of dangerous consequence: And for Armies there was no meanes; only about Castles, with small powers, lay al the businesse of these times, and they being so many, were to smal effect, but only held them doing, which was for many yeares.

The Earle of Glocester, the cheefe pillar of the Empresse, within two yeares after his last comming out of Normandie dyed, and shortly after, Miles Earle of Hereford, an especiall man of hers, which had vtterly quasht her, but that instead of a Brother she had a sonne grew vp to be of more estimation with the Nobility and shortly after of ablenesse to vndergoe the trauels of warre. His first expedition at sixteene yeares of age was Northward, to combine him with Dauid King of Scottes his great Vnckle, Vnckle, to whome his Mother hadde giuen the Country of Northumberland. After him folloves Stephen with an Army to Yorke, lest he should surprize that City, and to intercept him in his returne: but according to his vsual manner, and French-like, after the first heate of his vndertakings, which were quicke and braue, he quayles: nothing was effected, and both return without incountring.

Now to aduaunce the State and meanes of Henry, Fortune, as if in loue with young Princes, presents this occasion. Louys the seauenth, King of Fraunce going in person to the hollye Warres, and taking with him his wife Elenor, the onely daughter and heire of William Duke of Guien, grew into such an odious conceipt of her, vpon the notice of her lasciuious behauiour in those parts, as the first worke hee dooth vpon his comming, backe he repudiates, and turnes her home with all her great dowrie, rather content to loose the mightie estate shee brought then to liue with her.

With this great Ladie matches Henrie, before he was twentie yeares of age (beeing now Duke of Normandie, his Father deceased, who had recovered it from him) and had by her the possession of all those large and rich Countries appertaining to the Dutchy of Guien, besides, the Earledome of Poictu.

Whereupon Louys enraged to see him enlarged ged by this great accession of State, who was so neere, and like to bee so dangerous and eminent a Neighbour, combines with Stephen and aydes Eustace his Sonne, with mayne power, for the recouerie of Normandy, wherein he was first posselt. But this young Prince, furnished now with all this powerfull meanes, leaues the mannagement of the affayres of England to his Friendes, defendes Normandie, wrought so, as the King of Fraunce did him little hurt; and Eustace his Competitor, returned home into England, where shortly after he dyed, about eighteene years of his age, borne neuer to see out of the calamities of Warre, and was buried at Faversham with his Mother, who deceased a little before, and had no other ioy nor glorie of a Crowne, but what we see.

Stephen, whilst Duke Henry was in Normandie, recouers what he could, and at length besieges Wallingford, which seemes in these times to haue bin a peece of great importance, & impregnable, and reduced the Defendants to that extremitie, as they sent vnto Duke Henry for succour, who presently thereupon, in the mids of Winter, arriues in England with three thousand foot, and one hundred forty horse: where first to draw the King from Wallingford, hee layes siedege to Malmesbury, and had most of all the great men in the west, and from other parts

comming in vnto him. Stephen now resolud to put it to the triall of a day, brings thither al the power he could make, and far ouer-went his enemy in number; but fouds and stormes in an vnseasonable winter, kept the armies from encountering, till the Bishops doubtfull of the successe, & seeing how dangerous it was for them and the whole State, to haue a yong Princee get the maistry by his sworde, mediated a peace, which was after concluded in a Parliament at Winchester, vpon these conditions.

1. That King Stephen, during his Natural life, should still remaine King of England, and Henric inioy the Dukedome of Normandie, as discended vnto him from his Mother, and bee proclaimed heire apparant vnto the Kingdom of England, as the adopted sonne of king Stephen.

2. That the partizans of either should receiue no damage, but inioy their estates according to their ancient rights and titles.

3. That the King shoulde resume into his hands, all such parcelles of inheritance belonging to the Crowne, as had beene alyened by him, or vsurped in his time. And that all those possessions which by intrusion had bin violently taken from the owners since the daies of K. Henry, should be restored vnto them who were rightly possessed therein when the sayde King raigned.

4 That

4. That all such Castles as had beene built by the permission of Stephen, and in his time (which were found to be 1117.) should bee demolished, &c.

There is a Charter of this agreement in our Annals, which hath other Articles of reservation for the estates of particular persons. And first for William, the second Sonne of Stephen, to enjoy all the possessions his Father held before he was king of England, and manie other particulars of especiall note.

After this pacification, and all businesse heere, settled, Duke Henrie returnes into Normandy, and likewise, there concludes a peace with the king of France, and for that he would be sure to haue it, buyes it, with twentie thousand Markes.

And now King Stephan hauing attayned (that he neuer had) Peace (which yet, it seemes hee enioyed not a yeare after) vses all the best meanes he could to repayre the ruines of the State, makes his progresses into most parts of the kingdome, to reforme the mischiefes that had growne vp vnder the sword: and after his returne calles a Parliament at London, to consult of the best meanes for the publicke good. After the Parliament, hee goes to meete the Earle of Flanders at Douer, who desired Conference with him, and hauing dispatched him, falls presently sicke, dyes within fewe dayes after, ter, and was buried (in the Abbey he founded) at Feuersham, with the vnfortunate Princes.

A man so continually in motion, as wee cannot take his dimension, but only in passing, and that but on one side, which was warre: on the other, we neuer saw but a glaunce of him, which yet, for the most part, was such, as shewed him to bee a very woorthy Prince for the gouernment. He kept his word with the State concerning the relieuements of Tributes, and neuer had Subsidie that we find.

But which is more remarkeable, hauing his sword continually out, and so many defections and rebellions against him, hee neuer put anie great man to death. Besides, it is noted, that notwithstanding all these miseries of Warre, there were more Abbeyes builte in his raigne, then in an hundred years before, which shewes though the times were bad, they were not impious.

He raigned 18
yeares, and 10
moneths.

For the Faultes committed heerein, Charitable Reader, knowe they are not the Printers (w<sup>h</sup>o hath bin honestly carefull for his part) but meere mine owne: freely confessing my selfe to bee more an honorer, then searcher of antiquities, that lie far off from us, and onely studious of the generall notions, which especially concerne the succession of assayres of action, which is the part I haue undertaken. And therefore, I trust al woorthy spirites in that respect will pardon mee, and reforme my knowledge, rather by way of Conference, then detraction; for no man truely ingenious is malignant. And (if I liue) after this priuate impression, which is but of a fewe Coppies for my friends, I will amend what is amisse in the publick. I haue got ouer the worst and roughest part of this worke, and am now come into a more plaine and open passage, where I shal bee better able to stand to answer for what shal be done, and I trust haue more helpes of my friends, and all worthy men that are furnisht with matter of this nature, whom I inuoke to assyst mee, and who, seeing my honest
